12th Southern Capital Falls To N. Viet Units

Grip Also Tighter Around Quang Tri

SAIGON (UPI) — North Vietnamese forces concluded the first month of their offensive today by overrunning a district capital on South Vietnam's central coast and tightening their grip on the provincial capitals of Quang Tri and An Loc.

South Vietnamese troops were reported fleeing in the face of the Communist advance, some clinging to the skids of U. S. helicopters moving wounded and supplies.

North Vietnamese forces moved into Bong Son 300 miles north of Saigon, during the day as its battalion of regional militia force defenders fled. Bong Son was the 12th district capital captured in the offensive.

In Quang Tri, the country's northernmost provincial capital, South Vietnamese field officers said government troops had killed at least 150 Communists and knocked out seven tanks in fighting today.

U. S. Air Force and Marine F4 Phantom jets struck Communist positions around Quang Tri, 18 miles south of the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ), during the day but heavy ground fire prevented helicopters from landing at the city.

UPI reporter Edward Bassett, reporting from Qui Nhon, 250 miles north of Saigon, said Bong Son was defended by a battalion of regional militiamen —about 500 men—and were attacked by two battalions of North Vietnamese regulars, 1,000 to 1,200 men.

At Bong Son, five South Vietnamese soldiers jumped aboard a U.S. helicopter that had come to pick up a wounded American adviser. The pilot took off with the five men aboard, but was ordered to drop them off at the South Vietnamese base at Phu Cat. There, the soldiers were placed under arrest.

One U.S. adviser, Maj. Goerge Watson, was bitter about the Bong Son loss. "They (the South Vietnamese) had daisy chains of helicopter gunships, jet fighters and FAC's (Foward Air Controllers)," he

AN LOC

A Prayer For Rescue Helicopters

(Editors: The information from which the following story was written was obtained by UPI in an interview with a freelance reporter-photographer who went into An Loc by helicopter today.

The helicopter he came out on was shot down. He was rescued uninjured. He agreed to be interviewed by UPI on the condition that his identity not be revealed.)

AN LOC, Vietnam (UPI)— The lead helicopter swooped down for the landing pad at the south end of town, still held by South Vietnamese forces but under intense Communist fire.

Just before it was hit by antiaircraft fire, the pilots and eight tense South Vietnamese infantrymen spotted the 200 soldiers, many of them wounded, crowding the edge of the pad.

Standing, and on bended knees, they clasped their hands in front of them, begging the pilot to land and carry them out of An Loc.

To call An Loc "the battered provincial capital, 60 miles north of Saigon" is the understatement of the war. To its besieged defenders, holding the city on direct orders from President Nguyen Van Thieu, it is quite simply hell.

The Communists control all of the northern half of the town —or what remains after hundreds of air strikes—part of the southern half and most of the surrounding rubber plantation.

South Vietnamese troops control two small military compounds and the ground they stand on atop a few rolling hills overlooking An Loc.

Both sides claim their flag flies over An Loc and both are right.

Since April 7, the South Vietnamese have held their tiny plot of ground on An Loc's southern edge against tank, human wave and shelling assaults.

The troops have been unable to get out. Reinforcements are landed miles away and sometimes fight their way through to the town to take the places of

AN ASSESSMENT

Wallace: New Spoiling Role?

By GODFREY SPERLING, JR.
The Christian Science Monitor
News Service

WASHINGTON — Senator Edmund S. Muskie is now out of contention in the primaries. But his withdrawal does little to change what already was shaping up as primarily a two-man, Humphrey-McGovern battle, with George Wallace providing a certain amount of harassing action.

In fact, Muskie already had receded from the scene before he admitted it formally.

In a new assessment of key primary states — from Monitor writers stationed there — it comes through vividly that Wallace could well do some more spoiling in the very near future.

Wallace, who helped send Muskie on the decline in Florida, Wisconsin, and Pennsylvania, seems set to give Sen. Hubert Humphrey all kinds of trouble in Indiana, West Virginia, Michigan, Nebraska.

And in North Carolina, Wallace is running neck and neck with former Gov. Terry Sanford, seen by some to be a stand-in for Humphrey.

Sen. George McGovern, too, might be hurt by Wallace, in Nebraska and Michigan.

But up to now the Wallace damage has been mainly to the more conservative or centrist candidate.

Thus Humphrey, who has taken the center position previously occupied by Muskie, stands to be the more likely loser from strong Wallace performances.

All this, it appears, means that McGovern has the easier road between now and the final big primaries in Oregon, California and New York.

And in two of these — Oregon and New York — Monitor writers see McGovern already in the lead. In California Hubert Humphrey is given the current edge, but McGovern appears to be coming up fast.

All this means, too, that McGovern, as of now, seems to have the best chance of going into the convention with the most delegates.

However, should Humphrey be able to overcome Wallace — which Muskie was not able to do — the Minnesota senator may be able to pick up the kind of momentum that will strengthen his positions in later primaries.

Humphrey does appear to be off to a good start. Ohio, as of now, appears to be his, although McGovern again, is making fast progress there as he intensifies his campaign in that state.

The word from Ohio about Wallace is interesting, however: "Were he on the ballot he might win here."

But Humphrey does butt heads with Wallace in Indiana this week. As of now, the Monitor assessment is calling the race for the governor, but says Humphrey has gained momentum from the Pennsylvania vic-

Ship Models Recall The Sea's Majesty

By MARC NURRE

The stress of the open sea, an inanimate force working by influence through the minds and skills of 16th and 17th Century shipbuilders, produced more than seaworthy ships.

It produced functional works of art — works transmitted to the 20th Century mainly through lithographs and faded tintypes, two dimensional forms which struggle in vain to capture genius in three dimensions.

To one old Englishman it must have seemed an inadequate attempt, for though in poor health, he builds two replicas per year of the ships which were the glory of the days of sail.

To support himself, the man sells his creations through a London shop, and when Ray L. Choklat discovered one four years ago, he didn't hesitate.

He bought it and had to carry it gingerly home in his lap as he sat on a jet. He and his wife gave the shopkeeper a standing order: "We told him that we wanted all the old man could produce," said Choklat, who now lives on a yacht in the Sausalito Yacht Harbor.

He recognized the workmanship in that first replica, and has since started a collection of the models of the old man he knows only as T. Bradbury.

Choklat said he has tried without success to learn more of Bradbury, and so far has been able to deal with him only through Hummel LTD., the shop where he bought the first model.

"Well-made models are not a thing you can buy easily," he

Auctioned Yacht Burns On Bay Trip

Less than an hour after it was auctioned in Sausalito for $40,000, the 92-foot yacht Princess Mary was heavily damaged by fire yesterday near Alcatraz Island.

None of the six persons aboard was injured and all were removed by a passing ferry and a Coast Guard cutter.

After battling the blaze for three hours, the Coast Guard towed the damaged 53-year-old yacht to the Alameda Yacht Harbor.

John Maddex, an automobile dealer from Piedmont, had just purchased the boat from the Internal Revenue Service. It was auctioned by IRS to cover a tax lien against the craft's former owners, Guy O. and Beverly Foss of Seattle.

Mddex, who had outbid about a dozen prospective buyers, watched his yacht burn from the deck of a nearby Coast Guard cutter. Five friends were with him on the voyage when the fire broke out about 4 p.m.

"I've had boats for 20 years," he said. "It's not the nicest boat I've ever had, but it was the most classic. I was going to use it opening day of the yachting season."

According to Maddex, the fire began in the exhaust system and spread to the exhaust pipes.

BOATING SPECIAL IN TODAY'S I-J

WIRE NEWS BRIEFS From Everywhere

Lindsay to Lennons' Aid

Lennon

NEW YORK (UPI) —Mayor John Lindsay has come to the aid of ex-Beatle John Lennon and his artist wife Yoko Ono who are being threatened with deportatiion because of Lennon's conviction on marijuana charges in England.

Lindsay, in a letter to the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, asked that the Lennons be allowed to remain in this country and be granted resident status in New York.

A deportation hearing for the Lennons is scheduled for Tuesday. Lennon, a British subject, is unable to renew his visa because of the conviction four years ago. But he said Friday the government's action stems from his anti-Vietnam war stands.

Lindsay said it was "very much in the public interest" for the Lennons to be allowed to remain in New York. The mayor added that the deportation attempt is "a grave injustice" and "cruel treatment."

In a Friday news conference in Washington, Lennon said he wanted to remain in New York. "We love it," he said. His wife chimed in: "We feel we're being kicked out of our town."

Miss Ono said that if they are deported she will lose custody of her 8-year-old daughter by another marriage. Last month a Houston court granted custody of the child to the Lennons provided they raise the her in the United States.

Strife In Spain

MADRID (UPI) — Spanish news media today reported mounting labor and student unrest as the result of a call by left wing underground organizations to mark May 1 with a wave of protest against the rightwing government of Generalisimo Francisco Franco.

Three of Spain's biggest universities were closed this week because of student unrest. Scattered strikes and demonstrations involving thousands of persons were reported by the nation's two major wire services in Madrid, Barcelona and other cities. The reports said arrests were made, but did not specify their number.

45 Years Later

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — An elderly transient who said the killing of a Los Angeles police officer 45 years ago has "haunted" him ever since was convicted of first degree murder yesterday.

The defendant, Matthew Kilgariff, 67, was arrested on a "mental case" disturbance call last October and later admitted to police the 1927 slaying of officer Parley Bennett during a robbery.

A Blessing?

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Los Angeles Mayor Sam Yorty said yesterday San Diego's anticipated loss of the Republican convention to Miami Beach might be a "blessing in disguise."

Yorty told newsmen in San Diego that if the convention had been held here the city might have lost a lot of the regular tourist business that could never have been recaptured. He said that was the reason he didn't push to have the convention in Los Angeles.

Moon Birth Seen

TULLAHOMA, Tenn. (UPI) — This century will see the first child born on the moon, Dr. Wernher von Braun predicted yesterday.

"What with women's lib and all that, we will probably have love affairs and I predict that the first child will be born on the moon before the year 2000," said von Braun, a high official of the space agency.

Von Braun, who has been called the father of the U.S. space program, spoke to the National Congress on Aerospace Education at the University of Tennessee Space Institute.

Working Visit

MOSCOW (UPI) — President Anwar Sadat of Egypt today concluded a quick working visit in which he and Soviet leaders conferred for nearly six hours on Middle East strategy.

Arab sources said Sadat planned to leave for home today following a final chat in the Kremlin with Soviet Communist leader Leonid I. Brezhnev.

Connally To Play Host To President Tomorrow

In the midst of a three-day Florida vacation, Nixon took an unexpected side trip yesterday to Grand Cay, the private island in the Bahamas owned by longtime friend Robert Abplanlap.

It was a change of scenery, but more relaxation for the President who took a quick swim in the choppy seas after arrival, and then had a leisurely dinner with his host Abplanlap and his Florida neighbor C. G. "Bebe" Rebozo.

A briefcase of presidential papers was nearby.

Nixon was expected to return to Key Biscayne by helicopter later today. Then tomorrow the president flies to Texas for a reception and dinner at Connally's Picosa ranch at Floresville, 40 miles outside of San Antonio.

Connally has invited about 200 friends to meet his boss. The guest list was not released in advance, but the names were sure to include influential political and business figures, persons whose support would be invaluable in capturing the state's 26 electoral votes in November.

Sources close to the former Texas governor, who is a Democrat, downplayed the significance of the dinner, calling it merely an example of Texas hospitality. But the invitation has revived speculation that Connally would be a likely running mate for Nixon this fall if Vice President Spiro Agnew chooses to step aside.

Despite earlier speculation, the White House said Nixon would not visit former President Lyndon B. Johnson during his Texas stop. The LBJ Ranch where Johnson is recuperating from a serious heart attack, is only 80 miles away from Connally's home.

But while White House officials said the President's schedule would not permit a personal visit with Johnson, they indicated Nixon would likely telephone his best wishes to Johnson for a speedy recovery.

McGovern Goes After The Blue Collar Vote

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

Sen. George S. McGovern, certain that he has locked up liberals and peace voters, is now trying to contest Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey's strength among blue collar workers in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

McGovern stumped through industrialized northern Ohio yesterday visiting Otis Elevator Co. and Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co. factories before meeting workers at Chevrolet's Vega plant.

Humphrey divided his time between Ohio, where he challenges McGovern, and neighboring Indiana, where he faces Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace.

Both states hold primaries Tuesday.

Wallace swung through North Carolina, telling a rally from a pickup truck's bed that "We're rebelling against the leadership that has looked down their nose at you," and Tennessee, which votes Thursday in a primary with Wallace a heavy favorite.

"They better treat me right because they can't win without me," Wallace said from behind a red, white and blue banner in Chattanooga before leaving for Indiana.

On the Republican front, GOP National Chairman Robert J. Dole in Topeka, Kan., and Vice President Spiro T. Agnew in Orono, Maine attacked Democrats.

Dole said McGovern, Humphrey and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy have a "curious willingness to find fault without first finding alternatives, to criticize without first proposing something better, to speak, in other words, without first thinking."

Humphrey in Cleveland said he favors federal tax credits for parents of parochial and private school children. In Fort Wayne and Indianapolis, Humphrey spoke on a variety of subjects ranging from J. Edgar Hoover to world peace.

McGovern said in Cleveland that he had never encountered so much support for Wallace, and told Otis Elevator workers that "the murder rate in Alabama is as bad as it is in most other states."

McGovern also told The Washington Post in an interview that he would alter his campaign to try to appeal more to blue collar workers and Democratic state leaders. He said there was some concern among the "purists" in his camp, but that he felt his base of support must be broadened.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, also in Ohio, renewed his attacks on McGovern, calling him an appeaser.

Rep. Shirley Chisholm visited the shrine of a 19th Century black woman activist, Sojourner Truth.

"The battle is still going on," Mrs. Chisholm said in Battle Creek, Mich.

'Planet X' Discovery Predicted

LIVERMORE, Calif. (UPI)—Discovery of a "planet X," nearly 6 billion miles from Earth on the border of the Milky Way, has been predicted by scientists at the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory.

The planet is far beyond Pluto, which is currently the farthest away of the nine known planets of the solar system. In its huge orbit, "planet X" takes 600 years to complete one revolution around the sun, said Joseph L. Brady, a Lawrence mathematician and an authority on Halley's Comet.

Brady and his colleagues used sophisticated mathematical computations of the movements of Halley's Comet dating back to before Christ to determine existance of "planet X."

COMPUTER USED

Brady, Edna M. Carpenter and Francis H. McMahon, said in the journal of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific that they used a computer to process mathematical observations of the strange deviations in Halley's Comet going back to biblical times.

Existence of the mysterious 10th plane had been predicted before, but Brady is the first to predict its orbit, mass and position, Lawrence officials said.

The planet is about 65 times as far from the Sun as Earth, which is about 93 million miles away. Its size and location account for mysterious deviations in the orbit of Halley's Comet, Brady said.

Calculations indicate "planet X" also accounts for deviations in the orbits of two other reappearing comets, Olbers and Pons-Brooks, he said.

IS NOT NEW

Prediction of unseen planets is not new. The location of Neptune was predicted in 1846 on the basis of deviations in the orbit of Uranus. Deviations in Neptune's orbit led to a prediction of Pluto's location in 1915.

Since its discovery in 1930, Pluto has been observed through less than one-fourth of its revolution around the sun and a complete picture of its orbit is not available.

Brady said "planet X" may be as elusive as Pluto was a half century ago. It took 15 years to find it from the time of its prediction.

Brandt Says Pacts Hold Wall's Future

BERLIN (UPI)—West German Chancellor Willy Brandt, seeking public support for his threatened regime, told an estimated 50,000 persons at a rally today that if his nonaggression pacts with Russia and Poland are not ratified, East Germany would close the Berlin Wall again.

"There is an inseparable connection between the pacts and Berlin," Brandt told the crowd outside City Hall. "You cannot have the one without the other. The Bundestag (Parliament) will have to consider this in all seriousness. No one will be able to ignore the connection."

The East Germans have already said they will lessen restrictions on traffic between the divided Berlins but warned such a move would be contingent on ratification of the 1970 accords.

Thursday, Brandt survived by a scant two ballots a parliamentary no confidence vote. The opposition called for the vote, claiming the accords Brandt worked out with the Big Four ambassadors contained West German concessions that got nothing in return.

The chancellor ran into more trouble Friday when he lost a crucial vote in Parliament on the proposed budget for his own office. Brandt went to the people today in the first of a series of May Day weekend appearances to muster support for his troubled government.

At a news conference in Berlin today, both Brandt and Foreign Minister Walter Scheel expressed confidence the pacts would be ratified. They said they saw prospects of the opposition breaking party ranks and voting with the coalition.

The 58-year-old chancellor also planned an appearance in the heavily populated Ruhr industrial area tomorrow and another on Monday, Europe's May Day holiday.

High Wire Performer Takes Fall

A spokesman for the show said Daniel Acosta, a native of Colombia, South America, was unconscious when he was taken from the stage to a hospital. He lost both blood and teeth in the fall to the stage at the Oakland Coliseum.

Acosta was in fair condition at San Leandro Memorial Hospital where he was taken by Kelly, the dancer who is producing and directing the show. A hospital spokesman said Acosta, 26, apparently did not suffer internal injuries but "had facial lacerations and a facial fracture."

A gasp went up from the audience of 6,000, including hundreds of children, when Acosta leap frogged over his partner, hit the wire and dropped to the stage.

The spokesman said Acosta and his partner, Pedro Carrillo, had been doing the act for a number of years and this was the first accident.

He said the timing of the two was apparently off in the segment of the act in which Acosta, dressed in a Charlie Chaplin outfit, jumps over the back of Carrillo, acting as a Keystone Cop.

The show, which opened here Thursday in the start of a national tour, went on after Acosta was taken to the hospital.

Apollo Team Will Arrive Home Today

ABOARD USS TICONDEROGA (UPI)—Apollo 16 astronauts John W. Young, Charles M. Duke and Thomas K. (Ken) Mattingly return to United States soil today after a 1.4 million mile voyage they hope unlocked the secrets of the moon.

The astronauts were to leave the prime recovery ship USS Ticonderoga by helicopter about noon today EST for Honolulu where they and part of the 245 pounds of rock samples collected during man's only scheduled visit to the moon's mysterious highlands are transferred to a C141 Air Force jet transport for the return to Houston.

The space pilots, the next-to-last Apollo moon flight crew, were scheduled to arrive at Ellington Air Force Base on the edge of the Manned Spacecraft Center about 9:45 p.m. EST.

ROCKS FLIGHT

Another portion of the rocks which scientists think may contain traces of the original lunar crust and give them leads to the formation of both the Earth and the moon will arrive at the space center about 4:30 p.m. EST today aboard a separate aircraft.

The astronauts returned from an 11-day mission in apparently better physical shape than any past team of lunar explorers, Dr. Charles Berry, the space agency's medical director, said Friday in Houston.

Young, Mattingly and Duke splashed down almost precisely on target 1,519 miles south of Hawaii Thursday and Young said the recovery operation was "super."

MEDICAL TESTS

The astronauts underwent extensive medical tests and had to skip the traditional Navy feast for returning spacemen because doctors want to keep their diet similar to the food they ate in space until the medical tests are completed.

The astronauts were having less difficulty in readjusting to the gravity of earth than the Apollo 15 crew did last summer. Their only apparent post-flight medical problems came from skin irritations where medical sensors were attached during the mission and a minor plugging of Young's ears during re-entry.

BLOOD DRAINED

GI Without Life For 10 Minutes

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (UPI)—For 10 minutes last month S. Sgt. Tors Olson lay on a surgical table without a heartbeat and without a drop of blood in his body.

Yesterday the 20-year-old Laurens, N.Y., native explained to newsmen what it was like to have six quarts of blood—none of it his own—circulating through his body.

"I feel pretty good now," Olson said. "I feel thankful to the Lord and closer to God."

According to Air Force doctors, Olson is the first person to have undergone successfully "total body perfusion"—total replacement of a patient's diseased blood with fresh donor blood after washing out his er wcirculatory system with a cleansing solution.

The procedure was performed at Wilford Hall Air Force Medical Center in San Antonio March 31 under a surgical team headed by Dr. (Col.) Gerald Klebanoff. Klebanoff described the total exchange of blood as a "last ditch" effort to save the sergeant's life.

In the procedure he used, all the blood is removed and replaced by a saline solution which washes the blood vessels clean after eight to 10 minutes in what Klebanoff called "suspended animation"—without any blood and with the heart stopped completely.

Olson had lapsed into a deep hepatitis-induced coma several days prior to the operation. He underwent the operation or Good Friday and on Easter Sunday he was awake and relatively clearheaded.

"I recognized my mother and father and I sang a couple of hymns," he said.

Dr. David Langdon, chief of the gastro-enterology section at the medical center, said the procedure used on Olson was applicable in cases of "dire liver coma of a great variety of cases."

"We have not cured the liver disease," he cautioned. "We have only given a patient a better environment in which to combat the disease... washing the toxins out of his blood."

The procedure differs from blood transfusions frequently given new-born babies in that those transfusions essentially dilute the toxic factors in the bloodstream, Klebanoff said.

"In a very real sense, the patient was in suspended animation — totally bloodless and cooled to approximately 85 degrees Fahrenheit," Klebanoff said. "The refrigeration of the body was necessary to protect his brain and vital organs from deterioration in the bloodless state."

The doctor said six quarts of fresh, undiseased blood was then pumped back into the patient. The use of the saline solution also allowed the liver to regenerate enough to resume its blood filtering job, doctors said.

The surgeons described the procedure as a relatively simple technique but that it had not been used before because there had been little laboratory experience with it and that it was still experimental. The procedure takes about 15 minutes in its entirety, doctors said.

NLRB Orders Bank Election

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—The National Labor Relations Board in a 4 to 1 decision, has ordered union representation elections in Bank of America branches in Walnut Creek and Alamo.

It will be the first time in the bank's history that separate elections have been held in individual bank branches.

Bank officials said no appeal will be made on the NLRB order and that the bank will abide by the results of the elections.

The elections were ordered to be held within 30 days. Bank officials had argued against union representation at individual branches.

FALL OPENING

New Sears Store Is Taking Shape

The new $4 million Sears Roebuck department store and automotive center is rapidly taking shape on the last 10 acres of open space available at Northgate Shopping Center, with opening date set for early fall, possibly September.

"It will be larger than the Geary Street store in San Francisco and one of the largest on the Pacific Coast," said Philo K. Holland Jr., public relations director for Sears.

Sears at Northgate will have a gross floor area of 225,000 square feet, including a separate automotive center with 19 car stalls and a gasoline island. This is considerably larger than the 188,868 square feet in the Sears store on Geary Street in San Francisco.

The Geary store has 740 parking spaces to 700 for Northgate Sears. However, this is not a fair comparison, Holland explained, because the Northgate Shopping Center will have a total of 3,023 stalls including the Sears area. Total parking capacity is therefore much bigger than at the Geary Street store.

Unlike most of the other Sears stores, which have flat walls and the square look, the Northgate Sears building has been designed with angled walls and indentations to break up the massive brick wall with ceramic tile trim. The roof will be of concrete tile.

The main building will have two stories and a basement. To the east (near Los Ranchitos Road) will be the automotive center and the gasoline island. To the west will be another building for seasonal sales of items like garden and nursery supplies.

M and T Inc., of San Francisco, owners of the 45-acre Northgate Shopping Center, leased the last 10 acres at the south end of the Mall to Sears Roebuck. Sears is putting up its own buildings.

General contractor is Williams and Burrows of Belmont, and the architects are Parkin Architects, Engineers, and Planners of Los Angeles. Project engineers are Simpson, Stratta and Associates of San Francisco. Construction, which started last June, is on schedule and is about 70 per cent complete.

Sears' first retail outlet into Marin County is expected to draw other smaller retail shops into The Mall at Northgate. In the past few months, about ten new shops have leased space in two new buildings that are under construction between the Sears buildings and the former City of Paris building.

The Mall, which includes the Emporium, Roos-Atkins and about 40 other stores, has gross sales of about $20 million annually. This is expected to increase by at least another 50 per cent when Sears and the other stores open up this fall.

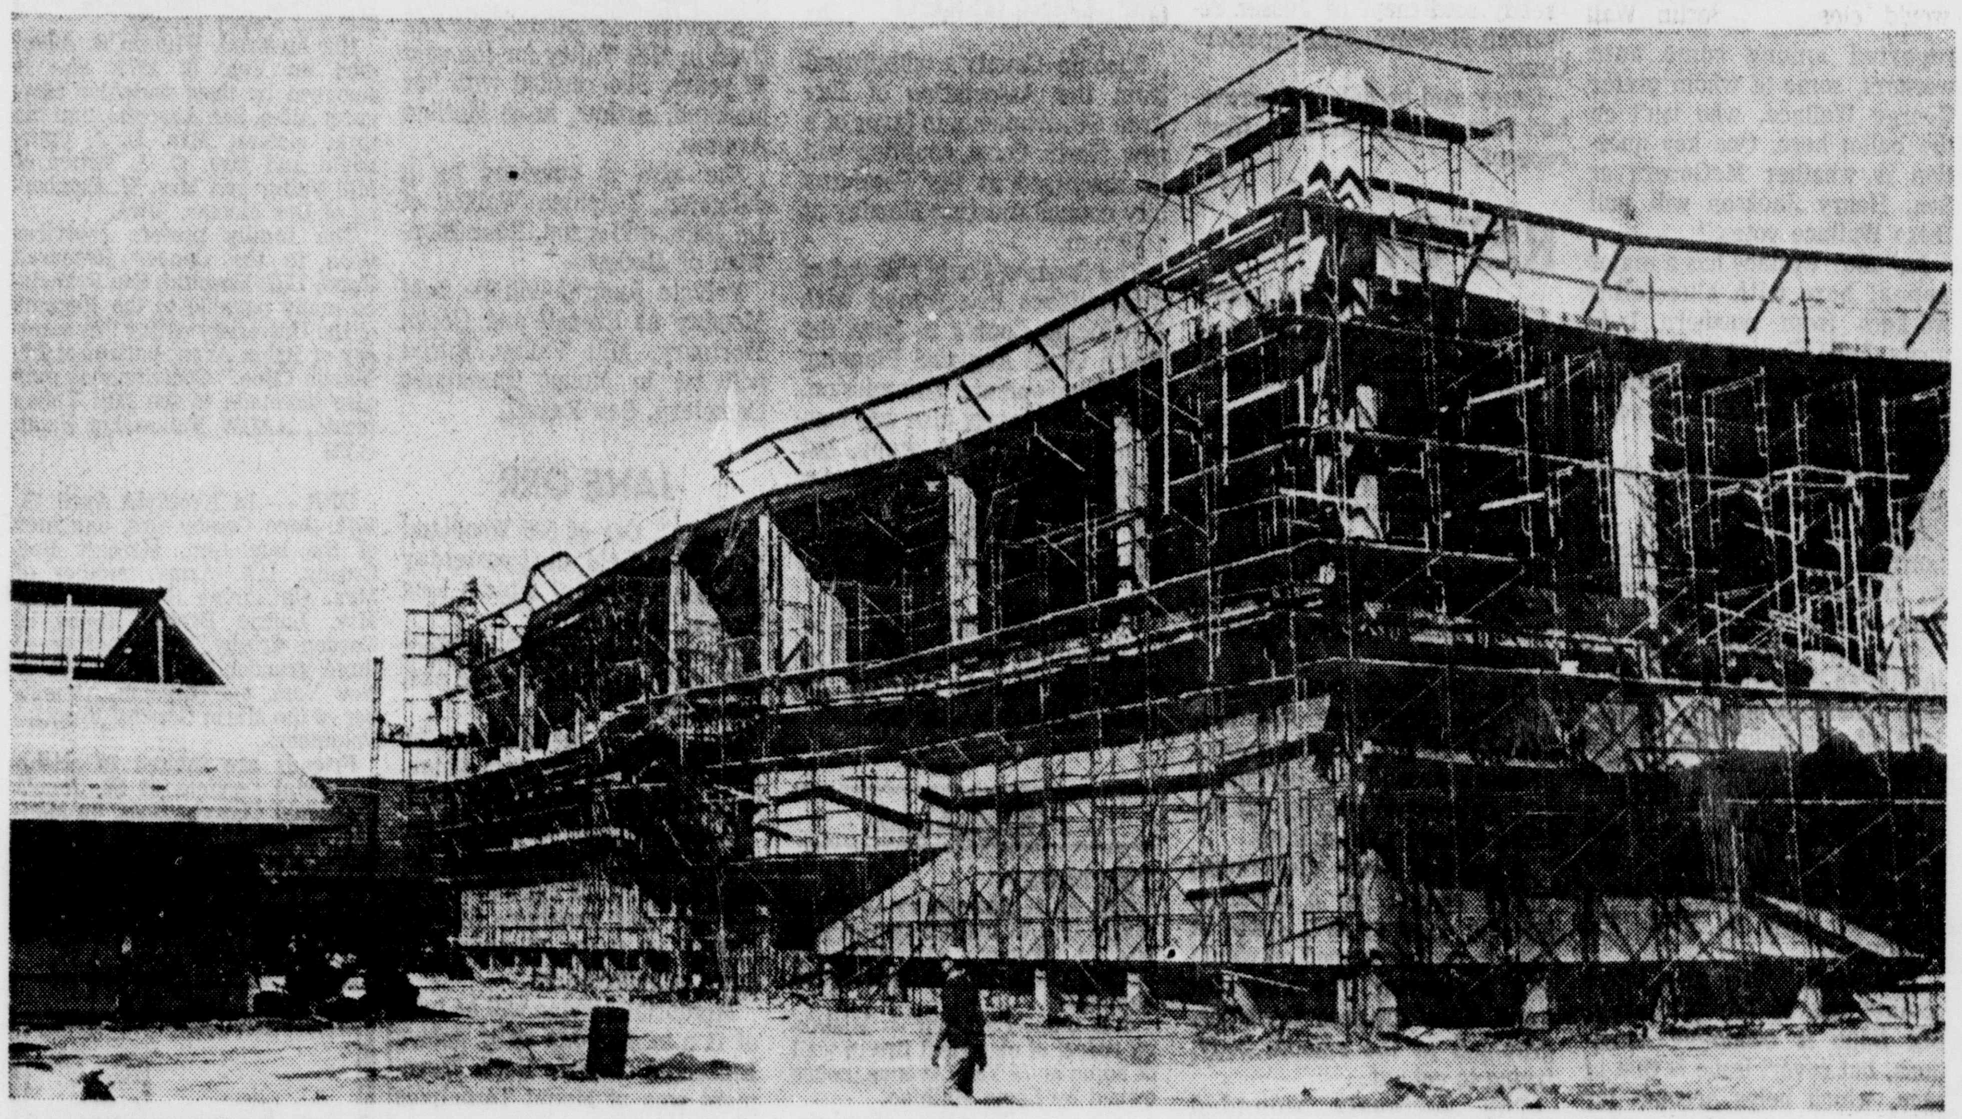
NEW LOOK — Sears' new store at the south end of The Mall at Northgate will look like this when completed this fall. Parkin Architects, Engineers and Planners of Los Angeles did away with the massive flat walls that characterize some of the other Sears stores.

Award Of Mert To The Pacific Sun

The Pacific Sun, a weekly magazine in Marin County, has won an Award of Merit from the California chapter of the American Institute of Planners for its series of articles entitled, "Environment Marin."

The awards jury noted that the series "communicated important environmental issues in Marin County to its citizens."



GOING UP — Web of scaffolding surrounds the giant new structure that will be become Sears' first Marin County retail outlet, at The Mall in Northgate. The two-story structure with basement, and separate buildings for seasonal sales (left) and the automotive center (not shown) will be larger than Sears' Geary Street store in San Francisco.

36-Unit Condominium In Cotati Is Approved

Plans for 36-unit condominium apartments were approved Thursday night by the Cotati Planning Commission.

Forhim Corp. presented plans for the condominiums which will be built near the Holiday Park subdivision. Planners heard that the 36 units will be part of an 80-unit development, the remainder of which will be in adjacent land in Rohnert Park.

Commissioner secretary Carol Bonfigli said the plans also included a swimming pool and recreation center.

The Cotati Planning Commission also:

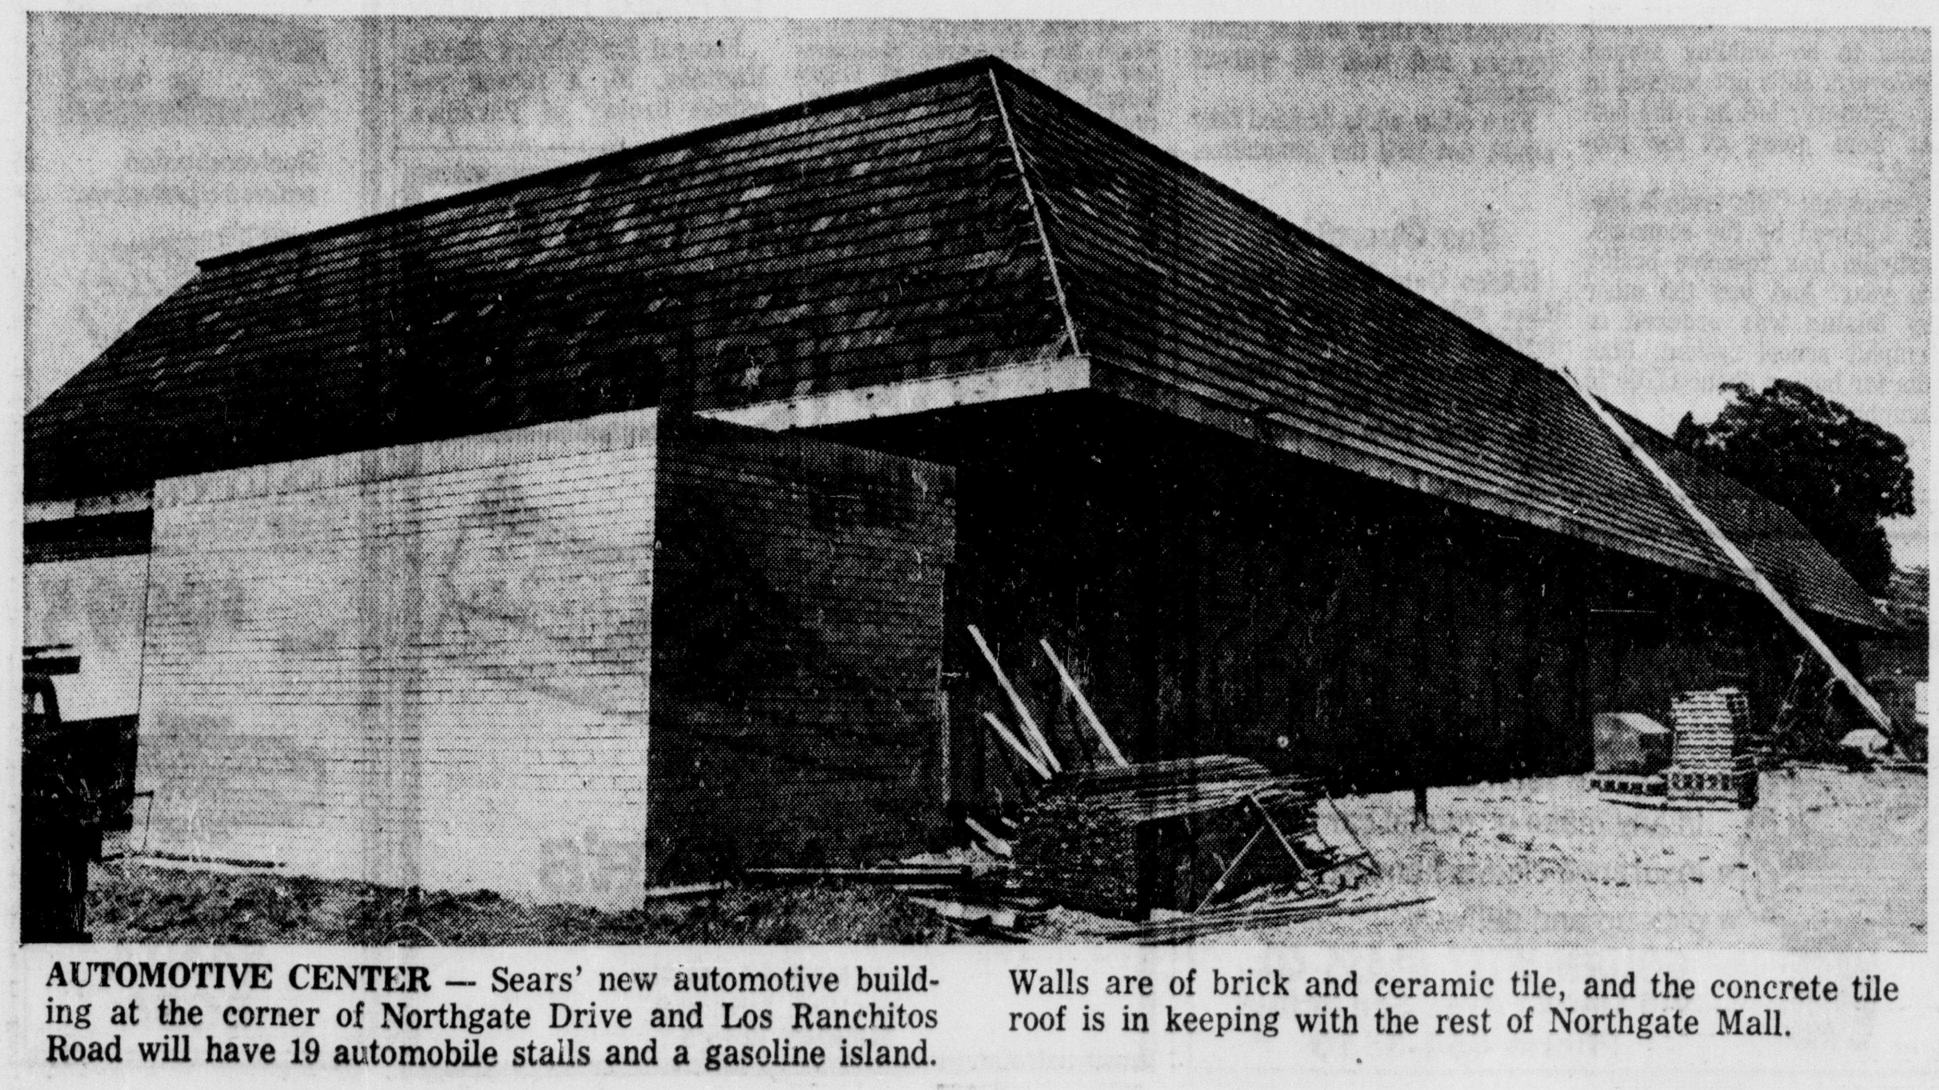
APARTMENTS — Approved the first section of a 74-unit apartment complex planned by Joseph Green at East Cotati Avenue and Charles Street. The development will be done in four phases.

TOWNHOUSES — Approved plans by commissioner Pablo Ronquillo for two townhouse units and two duplexes on East Sierra Avenue.

COMMITTEE — Named Ronquillo to represent the commission on the coordinating committee with the Cotati School District.

Licensed Drivers

DETROIT (UPI) —Licensed auto drivers in the United States now total nearly 116 million, the Federal Highway Administration estimates. The record number of 115,800,000 drivers is greater than the 1920 total U.S. population, which was 105,710,000.



AUTOMOTIVE CENTER — Sears' new automotive building at the corner of Northgate Drive and Los Ranchitos Road will have 19 automobile stalls and a gasoline island. Walls are of brick and ceramic tile, and the concrete tile roof is in keeping with the rest of Northgate Mall.

The payments aren't very big, either.

Just a $294. cash down payment and $62.06 a month for 36 months. (If you're not too good at math, that works out to a deferred payment price of $2528.16 which includes a finance charge at an ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE of 9.31%)

It uses about 5 pints of oil instead of 5 quarts.

It doesn't need antifreeze because the engine's air-cooled.

And although it does need gas, it doesn't need much of it 'usually a gallon every 25 miles or so.

Of course, you might be the kind that likes to pay cash for everything. In that case, the cash price is $2236.70.

NOW HOW DO WE GET IT OUT OF HERE?

An overturned car and a crushed deck, as viewed by two firemen, were the aftermath yesterday of a bizarre mishap in Tamalpais Valley. Vernon D. Nestel, 52, told the California Highway Patrol he was parking his auto on the carport above his home at 6:20 p.m. when the accelerator got stuck. The car shot off the carport, chopped two chimneys off the roof of the house, then dropped upside down onto a deck, which collapsed and dropped the car to the ground behind the house at 147 California Avenue. A pain in his elbow apparently was Nestel's only injury.

DREAM COMES TRUE

A Stroll Through Giant Boat Show

By BRUCE MARTIN

Scores of people are milling around and placards on more than two dozen booths extol everything from snowshoes to seashells.

The sports show — mainly the result of a lot of work by 20-year-old Terry C. Halbert of San Anselmo — closes out its four-day run today and tomorrow. Hours are 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.

"We're hoping at least 60,000 people will show up," Halbert said. "We've got exhibits for everything in outdoor sports."

There is a "mountaineering-backpacking" booth displaying a variety of ropes, picks, boots — and even snowshoes.

And a national parks exhibit declares the beauties of Yellowstone and Point Reyes National Seashore. Nearby, polished-smooth rocks and seashells from various parks are displayed in a delicate glass case.

There are exhibits of chromed-up custom motorcycles, of ski gear, of giant sail-surfboards, and — perched just outside the 80-by-150-foot exhibit room — a spanking new Piper two-seater aircraft.

Off to one side of the carnival area are a pair of metal towers — 30 and 60 feet in height — where the San Anselmo Ascenders, composed of members of Explorer Post 15, show off their climbing talents each day.

Halbert, the show's executive director, said the show has been two years in the planning by the post. It was almost held last year, he said, but a last-minute decision by county supervisors canceled the show due to a lack of facilities at the Civic Center. Since then, the Veterans Memorial Building has opened and the show was approved.

Cost of the show to the post has been about $10,000 with almost half that figure going toward rental of the building and grounds, Halbert said. The money was raised by the post and through donations by Halbert's father, Clayton.

Some costs were saved, young Halbert said, through the donation of outhouses by a local rental agency and by free electrical work from another firm.

Hie letters solicited about $2,400 in booth-advertising to help offset costs, Halbert said.

Innocent Plea To Bomb; Bail Zooms

A 21-year-old San Francisco man accused of trying to take a bomb into the almost-completed county fire house and sheriff's substation in Marin City, pleaded innocent yesterday, then listened quietly as his bail skyrocketed to $100,000.

Eddie Lee Griffin, also known as Frisco Eddie, first denied in Marin Municipal Court that he had gone to the new structure Thursday with a bomb and a .38-caliber pistol. Then, through his attorney, he tried to have his bail reduced from $25,000.

"If the defendant were prepared today to meet a bail of $25,000, I'd raise it. I'd raise it right now," Judge Peter Allen Smith said. The judge then upped bail to $100,000, although Griffin's attorney said his client could not even meet the lower sum.

The judge set a preliminary hearing in the case for Thursday.

Griffin was described by Deputy Dist. Atty. Kathryn D. Mitchell as a former Black Panther and at present a member of the Black Liberation Army. He apparently has no previous criminal record.

Sheriff's officials said the bomb attempt was thwarted by a deputy guarding the building. County supervisors in February ordered the structure watched because of rumors it would be burned.

The deputy said he caught Griffin crawling into a heater vent about 9 p.m. and made him carry the bomb away from the station. It went off about 10:45 p.m., harmlessly, making a series of about 40 pistol-like reports.

San Francisco police said the gun found on Griffin was stolen during an assault on a special policeman Sept. 9.

Pot Charge Is Reduced

Acting on the heels of a preliminary hearing, Judge Peter Allen Smith reduced the charge. The woman was arrested with two young men on a San Rafael hillside Feb. 15 when police saw one of them toss away a corn cob pipe.

A plastic bag containing pot and another pipe were found in Miss Gardiner's purse, police said. Her companions were charged only with misdemeanors.

Zen Center Buys Part Of Ranch

The San Francisco Zen Center, a religious organization plans to turn 70 acres of the Green Gulch Ranch near Muir Beach into an organic vegetable farm and public conference center.

Huey D. Johnson of Mill Valley, western regional director of the Nature Conservancy, which owns the rest of the 610-acre ranch, said today the Zen Center's plans were "a perfect use" of the lush flatlands of the ranch. The conservancy, which owns the uplands of the ranch, will retain all development rights on the flatlands as well, he said.

The conservancy holding was donated the land last year by the owner of the ranch, George Wheelwright III. He now lives on a ranch on the California-Nevada border.

Johnson said the sale to the Zen Center, now in escrow, will include the ranch house, which he used to house about 12 farm workers and accommodate small conferences. "It will be a place where people could meet peacefully," Johnson said.

The same 70 acres were offered last year for sale to the Tamalpais High School District as a nature study center, but the district rejected the purchase.

Johnson said the sale to the Zen Center will meet Wheelwright's desire to see the flatland maintained as a farm.

The Zen Center also owns property in San Francisco and Tassajara Hot Springs in Carmel Valley.

said. But he said once the Communist troops had entered the town, air strikes were no longer possible because of the risk of inflicting heavy casualties on the civilian population.

Bong Son had been under heavy attack for three days. It was the 12th district town to fall to the Communists in the offensive that will be one month old Sunday, and the second in Binh Dinh Province, long the most rebellion-ridden of South Vietnam's 44 provinces. Hoai An, six miles to the south, fell 10 days ago.

Watson radioed for a helicopter to pick him up. Two choppers arrived and he sent off his Vietnamese scouts and interpreters on the first. He took off in the second.

As of now, Wallace is out in front in Michigan, where the busing issue is, according to one writer, "reaching the point of hysteria."

Tennessee, too, is called "all Wallace." All the other candidates have written this state off to the Alabama governor save for Shirley Chisholm.

Wallace is called the "sleeper" in Nebraska. Humphrey is ahead, but with McGovern moving up fast.

All this adds up to the growing possibility that Wallace may in fact be right about his glowing prospects in the primaries — and that he will be able to exert powerful leverage at the convention.

From the Monitor writers come the following comments:

Ohio: "There is grumbling reported among some auto workers, some of whom prefer George Wallace, who isn't on the ballot here. One key question is whether McGovern or Sen. Henry Jackson will pull these Wallace votes."

Indiana: Wallace has a major appeal here with blue-collar workers from northern Indiana's Lake County as well as from farmers and trades people from small towns and rural areas."

California: "Humphrey probably out front now. He has support of organized labor, minorities, senior citizens, as well as certain backlog of credits from past campaigns."

Oregon: "The big issue still in Oregon is the economic situation. There is six-plus percentage of unemployment in the state, and unemployed workers in Seattle are coming south."

New York: "While taxes and economy are big issues, war having revival of interest here. This is also a plus for McGovern."

Maryland: "No new issue coming out of the primaries. Big issue is economic conditions, but covert issue is that of race, which helps account for large expected vote for Wallace."

Tennessee: "Big issue is busing, followed by the economy. Nashville has massive busing this year. And just the other day busing was ordered in Memphis school system. Plan calls for busing about 14,000 in Memphis."

Three-Hour Ordeal In Drain Pipe

A 21-year-old man, apparently under the influence of drugs, was trapped underground for three hours yesterday in Rohnert Park after he crawled into a 14-inch drainage pipe "to escape society and have peace of mind."

The man, Wayne L. Caseay, Santa Rosa was covered with mud when he was pried loose from the pipe. Caseay was taken to Santa Rosa Community Hospital for treatment.

According to police, Caseay said he had taken a substance referred to as orange sunshine acid the previous night and crawled into the pipe when he "became afraid" of himself.

The recovery operation began when screams for help were heard underground near 201 Alden Avenue.

A public works department official descended into the nearest manhole, 75 feet from Caseay, and tried to pull him out, but the man was too weak to hang onto a garden hose extended by the rescuer.

A tractor with a back hoe was summoned to the scene. At 6:50 p.m., after three hours of digging, a section of pipe was lifted from the trench and cracked open, freeing Caseay.

A Recount Of Recount Is Looming

A recount of the recount loomed in the contested Corte Madera City Council race yesterday as one of the candidates went to court over the matter.

Herber C. Leney, now locked in a tie with incumbent Robert P. Simmons in the wake of the April 11 election, asked Judge Henry J. Broderick of Marin Superior Court to order a new recount.

Broderick complied with Leney's request, and set the second recount for 2 p.m. May 15 in the courtroom of Judge E. Warren McGuire, also Superior Court.

Leney said he believed errors had been committed in the first recount.

Helicopters today made the first try in two weeks at taking troops into An Loc. Even the 96 soldiers they carried would be welcomed by the defenders.

The wounded and the shellshocked prayed the helicopters would come in so they could be carried away.

One helicopter was hit, perhaps by antiaircraft fire, perhaps by one of dozens of snipers in trees around the helicopter pad. It dropped heavily but the crash caused no casualties.

A score of South Vietnamese troops rushed for a covering gunship chopper as it swept in to pick up the downed crewmen and a reporter who was with them. They grabbed the skids, grappled at the smooth body, trying to get out.

The prayers went unanswered. Two other helicopters, hit by groundfire, quickly dropped off their load of infantrymen and took off without stopping.

Five other pilots decided they would not risk the groundfire.

Bus Operation

Golden Gate Bridge District buses will begin operating on daylight saving time at 3:01 a.m. tomorrow. Buses departing before that hour will complete their runs on standard time.

Reassigning Of Beban Is Sought

I-J Special Report

SAN FRANCISCO — The state Court of Appeal was asked yesterday by the American Civil Liberties Union to order Richard W. Beban of Mill Valley reassigned to his previous duties on the Marin County Grand Jury.

The 23-year-old maverick member of the jury contends he was taken off certain jury committees after he held an interview with the Berkeley Tribe in which he criticized some of the jury's methods.

The ACLU asked for the order after a similar action was rejected in Marin County Superior Court. Beban's term on the jury expires in June.

The ACLU action came after Beban's recent election as a director of the ACLU of Northern California.

In a separate matter, Beban is facing a contempt of court hearing for refusing to turn over documents about the Sausalito police probe.

Withdrawal From ABAG To Be Discussed

Sonoma County's withdrawal from the Association of Bay Area Governments in favor of a new North Coast coalition will be discussed at the Petaluma city council meeting Monday at 7:30 p.m.

Humboldt County also was considering joining the group, but instead asked that it become a multipurpose agency to include air and water pollution, industrial development and promotion.

The council will also hear requests for future use of the Christian Church building recently bought by the city.

Courthouse Sale Is On Agenda

The San Rafael City Council will consider the $650,000 purchase of the old county courthouse site when it meets at 8 p.m. Monday t city hall.

County supervisors last Tuesday agreed to sell the site to the city, giving the city six months to come up with the $650,000 or forfeit $10,000 to the county. The agreement requires that 40 per cent of the downtown site be open space, with half that amount fronting on Fourth Street.

McKeon Construction Co. of Sacramento proposes a six to eight-story office building, a three-story building and covered parking on the site. The firm has agreed with sale conditions, which it will assume if it acquires the property from the city.

The council also is expected to give final adoption to an ordinance declaring the council the city's redevelopment agency. Council members on April 17 unanimously approved the ordinance, which will allow financing of downtown redevelopment.

Festival Picks Marin Ballet For May Gala

The Marin Civic Ballet Company has been chosen to appear at the gala performance of the three-day Pacific Regional Ballet Festival which opens May 5 in Seattle, Wash.

The gala climaxes the festival which will include workshops, demonstrations and performances by 18 ballet companies.

The Marin company will perform "Rachmaninoff Pas de Deux," choreographed by Norbert Vesak and danced by Jane Thelen and David White.

The company will also perform, "The Gift to be Simple," a series of sketches set to hymns of the American Shaker community, at the festival's chamber concert.

Funds for the trip were raised from proceeds of this year's spring concert and Nutcracker performances.

Architects For Park Narrowed

The Tiburon Parks and Recreation Commission last night reviewed the qualifications of 10 landscape architects and park planners, and narrowed to three the number who may be asked to design a master plan for the Richardson Bay lineal park.

Representatives of the three firms will be interviewed by a commission committee, said Asst. City Mgr. Robert L. Kleinert.

The three firms under consideration are Lawrence Halprin Associates of San Francisco, Sasaki-Walker Associates of Sausalito and Royston, Hanamoto, Beck and Abey of San Francisco.

He said the commission also endorsed the concept of a regional park district as presented by county park officials at an earlier meeting, and asked that the city council support its endorsement.

Commissioners also approved a summer work program for Tiburon youths from ages 14 to 18. Kleinert said the program would run in two-week shifts from June 19 to Aug. 25, and would provide employment with city crews for two boys at a time between the dates outlined. Applicants should apply at city hall, he said.

Commissioners also approved landscaping plans for the Hillhaven water tank, Kleinert said. The plans were submitted by the Marin Municipal Water District, and the city is to maintain the trees and plants once installed by the water district, said Kleinert.

Tom Jones Does A Quick Change

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI)—Singer Tom Jones, whose tight-fitting trousers have become a trademark, split a seam Thursday night.

Jones was 15 minutes into his opening night act at Caesar's Palace when it happened. A thread gave way and within minutes the inside seam on the left leg of his trousers had split six inches.

"Excuse me," said Jones cooly, "while I change my pants."

HOW TO PLAY WINNING BRIDGE

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

Right Way To Play Suit Not Always Right Way For Hand

Everybody knows how to play the heart suit in today's hand. You lead the jack of hearts from dummy and let it ride for a finesse. If East has the king of hearts you will not lose a heart trick; and if West has the king the finesse costs nothing because you were going to lose a heart trick anyway. Right? Wrong. The right way to play a suit is not necessarily the right way to play the entire hand.

QUEEN DROPS

West opens the jack of clubs, and you win with dummy's king. East drops the queen. This should freeze the marrow in your bones.

There is grave danger that East is now out of clubs. This has a serious effect on your plan for the rest of the hand.

If you now take a heart finesse you are placing your contract in jeopardy, for if West has the king of hearts he will return a club for East to trump. (After all, West, too, saw East's queen of clubs fall on the opening lead.)

CONCEDE TO KING

So at the second trick you should lead a heart to the ace and then play another heart, conceding a trick to the king.

This play is sure to work. If each opponent has two trumps, the trumps will all be drawn on these two tricks. If one opponent has more than two trumps, he cannot give his partner a ruff (since his partner has no trumps left), and you can regain the lead to draw the rest of the trumps.

NORMAL WAY

If South makes the mistake of taking the trump finesse at the second trick —the normal way of playing the trump suit — he goes down. West wins with the king of hearts and leads the jack of clubs, allowing his partner to ruff out dummy's ace. The defenders get a spade, a club, the king of hearts and a ruffing trick.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one notrump (16 to 18 points).

You hold:
♠- 7 5 3
♥- J 9 6 4
♦- 10 9 5
♣- A K 4.

What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two clubs, the Stayman Convention asking partner to bid a major suit of four or more cards.

If he bids two hearts, you will raise to three; if he bids anything else, you will bid two notrumps.

FINLEY BLUE

Talks Stop: Strikeout

CHICAGO (UPI)—It was a strikeout any way you look at it. After 22 hours of negotiating, baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn flew back to New York, pitcher Vida Blue left for California and Oakland Athletics owner Charles Finley returned to his Chicago office.

Talks with the holdout pitcher ended without settlement Friday when Blue balked at making public two contract concessions, Finley said.

"I am very disappointed and disillusioned to say the least," Finley said. "We had reached an agreement granting Vida's two requests and he backed out."

He said he had "no idea" why Blue would not sign the joint statement. "If I did know why he refused, I'd be in business. Everyone agreed beforehand. I just don't know why he wouldn't sign."

Kuhn, who tried to mediate the dispute, stepped into the picture at his own invitation "because," a tired Finley said, "he thought he could be of assistance. And I'll say he really tried to help in the settlement."

Finley said the A's had agreed to give their star hurler a $5,000 bonus for the 1971 season and to give him his $8,000 college scholarship on the spot.

"When Vida signed his first contact with the A's it included a college scholarship program with $8,000 based on eight semesters with $1,000 per semester. This program was to begin within a year and a half after signing. Otherwise it was null and void. They wanted us to prepay them $8,000 today. We agreed," Finley said.

The trouble came, the owner said, when attorneys met to draft a joint statement for the press. "That statement included the two concessions and his agreed salary of $50,000," Finley said.

"But when the statement was drafted, Mr. Gerst, (Robert Gerst, Blue's agent) advised us that Vida was not agreeable to the statement. He said he preferred no statement at all."

"So there is no agreement," Finley said.

Blue, whose sensational season attracted some of the biggest crowds in the majors last year, originally asked for $110,000 for 1972. He came down to $92,000 and then to $75,000.

Finley had been adamant on the $50,000 figure.

Kuhn before department said "some progress has been made but a final solution at this time has not been worked out."

When asked if he thought a settlement was near, Finley said, "I wish I knew."

A's Top Brewers; Mangual Returns

MILWAUKEE (UPI) —In a space of a few hours, the Oakland Athletics lost a pitcher, gained an outfielder and won a ballgame.

Friday night, lefty Ken Holtzman spaced five hits and went the route to beat the Milwaukee Brewers 5-1 behind a four-run sixth inning.

The A's used four walks and three singles during their big outburst in which they sent 10 men to the plate.

Gene Tenace led off with a single and Brewer starter Jim Slaton walked Bobby Brooks and ran the count to 3-1 on Larry Brown before being relieved by Jim Colbert. Colbert walked Brown to load the bases and also walked Holtzman for force Tenace home from third.

A sacrifice fly by Bert Campaneris and singles by Joe Rudi and Reggie Jackson brought home three more runs.

Campaneris scoredRfthe game's first run after singling as a leadoff batter. Jackson drove him home with a single.

Holtzman faced only 16 batters in the first five innings while improving his record to 21. He got the first two men to start the sixth but then walked a batter and gave up successive singles to Bob Heise and John Briggs to bring home one run.

A walk to George Scott loaded the bases but Holtzman then picked off Briggs to end the threat.

Knicks Visit Lakers; Los Angeles Favored

INGLEWOOD (UPI) — Despite a 22-point setback in the opening playoff game, the Los Angeles Lakers still are the favorites in their National Basketball Association championship series with the New York Knicks and six-point choices in Sunday's second game.

But the series odds have dropped from 5-2 to 6-5 following Wednesday night's 114-92 Knicks' romp, a win in which the New Yorkers blazed away at a 72 per cent clip from the field in the first half for an 18-point intermission bulge.

'GET SHOOTER'

"We're going to have to get to the shooter quicker," Lakers' coach Bill Sharman said. "We're going to need a smarter defensive effort.

"The problem is Jerry Lucas. Because of him, the Knicks are the hardest team in the league for us to match up against.

A fill-in for the ailing Willis Reed, the 6-foot-8 Lucas fires in 25-foot range bombs with amazing accuracy. He was shooting 50 per cent from the floor going into the Lakers-Knicks' series and had 26 points on 13 of 21 in the opener.

'LUCAS TOUGHER'

"I don't want to take anything away from Willis," Sharman continued, "but when Lucas is hitting, he's tougher for us than Reed."

"People dwell on Reed's absence and forget about Lucas."

Los Angeles ' 7-1 goliath, Wilt Chamberlain, does not have the physical equipment to go outside and chase Lucas. If Sharman puts one of his other front liners on Lucas, Chamberlain would have to guard either 6-5 Bill Bradley or 6-6 Dave DeBusschere, both talented shooters.

Bradley had 29 points on 11 for 12 from the floor and DeBusschere finished with 19 on 9 for 18 in addition to picking off 18 rebounds, one rebound less than Chamberlain.

'PHILOSOPHIC'

Red Holtzman, whose Knicks beat the Lakers in seven games for their first NBA championship in 1970, was philosophic about his club's eighth win in nine playoff games.

"We had a good night and they had a bad one," he said. "We've been playing well lately, which you have to do to beat a team like that."

With Gail Goodrich and Jerry West averaging 51.7 points between them, the Lakers set an all-time NBA record of 69-13 during the regular season. Meanwhile, the Knicks struggled to a 48-34 mark to finish second in the Atlantic Division —the seventh best record in the league.

ANOTHER MARK

The Lakers scored more than 100 points in 81 of their 82 regular season contests, another league mark. But in 11 playoff games, they've been under the century mark four times.

In a 4-0 sweep against Chicago and a 4-2 victory over defending NBA champion Milwaukee, West averaged 24.5 points and Goodrich 22.9 but both had subpar nights in the first game against the Knicks. West finished with just 12 points and Goodrich 20, only four in the final three quarters.

KNICKS

The Knicks took Baltimore in six games in their first playoff series and then upset Atlantic Division kingpin Boston in five for the Eastern Conference title.

The second game of the series will start at 1:40 p.m. PST Sunday and is scheduled to be shown locally on television as well as nationally.

Redwood Loses In Baseball

No Marin County Athletic League baseball team has ever made it through the year undefeated.

Redwood High School's 1972 squad will not do it either.

The three-hit pitching of Marin Catholic's Jim Petray and Jim Lowe at Albert Park yesterday stopped the Giants for the first time all year, 3-1.

WILDCATS

The Wildcats, as usual, scrambled for their runs. In the fourth inning, with two men on, Rich Lopez popped a ball up near the first base line. It bounced off catcher Doug Hartman's glove, and in a disputed call, the umpire ruled it a fair ball. A hustling Steve Sherry was meanwhile legging it home from second to score.

ARBIOS

Pete Arbios connected solidly to left center in the fifth off loser Gene Frey to get Marin Catholic's next run, plating Scott Cozza from third.

The Marin 'Cats combined two infield singles, a sacrifice, and a wild pitch for their final tally in the sixth.

Scott Barrie had all three of Redwood's hits, one coming in a dynamite fifth inning for Redwood. Petray was in a jam, having walked two Giants and given up Barrie's single. With the bases loaded, he unleashed a wild pitch, scoring Redwood's only run from third.

Still with the sacks full, Marin Catholic turned to Lowe, who with one pitch, got Bob Brown to ground into a double play, third to home to first.

OUTSTANDING CATCHES

The Wildcats are now 4-4 in league play, but according to Hughes, "We don't feel that today's win was an upset. We think we're best in the league."

JOHNSON BOMBED

Giant Bullpen Collapses In Loss

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — It's an old story and a sad one for the San Francisco Giants. The bullpen collapsed again.

"We have to find someone who can come into a game get somebody out," said manager Charlie Fox after the Giants lost 8-6 to the Montreal Expos Friday night.

Jerry Johnson, who won 12 games and saved 18 others last season in the Giants' drive to the National League West pennant, gave up three hits and the winning runs in the ninth inning.

"He's throwing the ball the same as he did last year," said Fox, "but the other teams are hitting it. There's nothing wrong with his arm."

Johnson took over in the ninth inning after Ron Bryant left for a pinchhitter. Johnson got one out and then gave up singles to Bob Bailey and Mike Jorgenson. He struck out Clyde Mashore but then walked Ken Singleton to load the bases.

Pinchhitter Jim Fairey then singled to center to score two runs and send the Giants reeling to their sixth defeat in the last seven games.

The Giants have only two complete games from their pitching staff this season and, ironically, both of those were losing efforts by Juan Marichal.

"We need a complete game from somebody right now," Fox said.

San Francisco saw a 13-hit attack wasted by the poor pitching of starter Don Carrithers and Johnson's failure in the ninth inning.

"We're getting enough runs to win," said Fox.

Chris Speier had three doubles, scored two runs and drove in another; Dave Kingman had a homer and drove in three runs and Bobby Bonds a triple and two singles.

Kingman now has major league leading totals of six

Kentucky Court Gets 1968 Derby Win Row

BOSTON (UPI)—It apparently will take the Kentucky Supreme Court to decide who won the 1968 Kentucky Derby, the declared winner Forward Pass, or Dancer's Image.

That is, if the Supreme Court agrees to accept jurisdiction.

The owner of Dancer's Image, Peter Fuller, said here Friday he would ask the Kentucky high court to rehear the Kentucky Court of Appeals decision that overturned a lower court ruling which had given first place money of $122,600 to Fuller's horse.

"I'm stunned by the latest decision," Fuller said. "I thought the matter had already been settled. We will seek a rehearing. I think that is the next move."

Fuller did say that it was his "understanding that you can't take this case to the Supreme Court —I don't know why." He said he had "no idea" whether the court would agree to rehear the case, but he intended to try to find out.

Fuller said he had spent "$200,000 out of his pocket, not counting any time and energy on my part. That seems incredible," he said at a news conference.

Dancer's Image did finish first in the 94th Kentucky Derby but the horse was disqualified and the race awarded to Forward Pass after the drug phenulbutazone, or a derivative, was found after the race in one of the urine samples taken from Dancer's Image.

Appealing the disqualification, Fuller won a Franklin County circuit court decision that gave Dancer's Image the victory. However, the Court of Appeals this week found there was "an abundance of substantial evidence" supporting the drug charge. Forward Pass thus became the "winner" again of a four-year-old horse race.

Fuller noted that Dancer's Image is in stud and he has lost a great deal in stud fees.

Reliever Lee Finds It Rough

By U. P. INTERNATIONAL

Terra Linda's Bill Lee is apparently finding his major league baseball life difficult as the Boston Red Sox' number one left-handed reliever.

Lee suffered his first loss yesterday as the Rangers dumped Boston 9-6, to the delight of the Texas fans. Lee, 0-1, surrendered four runs in one and two-thirds innings of labor after taking over for starter Sonny Siebert in the sixth inning. Lee was credited with three strikeouts but gave up three hits and two walks.

The Baltimore Orioles, aided by Nolan Ryan's wildness and paced bly a 16-hit attack snapped a four-game losing streak Friday night by whipping the California Angels, 12-2.

Bobby Darwin, the AmericanLeague's early-season slugging sensation belted his fifth home run to highlight a four-run seventh inning and give the American West leading Minnesota Twins a 4-1 victory over Mel Stottlemyre and the New York Yankees.

Bullpen refugee Tom Timmerman pitched a three-hitter for his first big league shutout while Norm Cash and Ed Brinkman drove in four runs each to bring the Detroit Tigers a 12-0 win over the Chicago White Sox.

Thousands of Bay Area yachtsmen will pass in review before the Navy destroyer U.S.S. Perkins during the Corinthian Yacht Club's eighth annual Blessing of the Pleasure Craft Pageant tomorrow at 9 a.m. on San Francisco Bay.

NELSON GOLF

Rodriguez, Trevino, Murphy Share Lead

DALLAS (UPI)—Juan "Chi Chi" Rodriguez has a share of the Byron Nelson Golf Classic lead with Lee Trevino and Bob Murphy going into today's second round, but it isn't the same little Puerto Rican links clown the fans are used to seeing. The 1972 edition of Chi Chi's Follies is being played straight from the shoulder with no more clowning around —and its paying dividends.

Friday, for example, he offset a lone bogey with five birdies for a four-under-par 32-34—66 to grab the early lead and it stood up although first the portly Murphy and then the semiserious Trevino came in to match the figure.

This trio was among 26 players who managed to best Preston Trail Golf Club's 7,086-yard, par 35-35—70 layout —the biggest assault the tortuous course has ever absorbed. Eighteen others matched regulation figures.

Rodriguez, Murphy and Trevino held only a one-stroke lead over five players bunched at 67, including rookie Jim Barber, former champion Bruce Crampton, Larry Ziegler, Bruce Devlin and Wilf Homenuik.

Homenuik, the Canadian lightweight, had a big chance to grab the lead with a 65, but a bogey-bogey finish wrecked it.

Billy Casper, Tom Weiskopf, former champ Miller Barber, John Schlee, Charles Coody and Gay Brewer —the latter returning to the tour for the first time since a bleeding ulcer knocked him out of the Masters —were at 68. And, defending champion Jack Nicklaus, seeking his third straight Nelson crown, was among a dozen players at 69. Napa's Ron Cerrudo had a 71.

Rodriguez, who claimed the galleries had deserted him as his game fell apart, said there would be "no more joking ... I never concentrated on my game before ... I was just a natural funny man.

Rodriguez had birdie putts of 10, 8, 1, 20 and 6 feet, but took his only bogey when he two-putted from 15 feet on No. 10.

JACK HANLEY

Jerry Johnson Blessed By Luck

One of Jerry Johnson's friends told him last year that if he fell out of a sixth floor window his fall probably would be cushioned by $20 bills. "That's how good your luck is," said the friend and Johnson chuckled.

The No. 1 bullpen man of the Giants was a lucky fellow in several relief assignments last season, particularly on one balmy June night in Candlestick Park. Bob Barton belted one of Johnson's fast balls for a ninth inning grand slam homer that established a 9-5 lead for the Padres over the Giants.

BUT JOHNSON was rewarded with an unexpected win when his teammates rallied for five runs in the bottom of the ninth to win the ball game 10-9.

Of course, Johnson didn't win 12 games in relief last year and save 18 other games purely on luck. He is an over-powering pitcher when his fast ball is running away from batters, sailing upward or occasionally leaving black and blue marks on his catcher. Johnson doesn't rely on skill — just that fast ball which neither he nor his catcher at times have any idea where it is going.

ON THOSE occasions when the fast ball, or Johnson's seldom used slider, comes in to a batter straight as a string it is hammered hard. Major league batters love to belt fast balls, just as much as broad-shouldered pitchers like Johnson love to throw them by batters.

During spring training this year, Johnson appeared in six exhibition games for a total of nine innings during which he allowed 15 hits, eight runs and wound up with a Cactus League ERA of 8.00. He lost two of those games prompting somebody to comment: "Maybe he won't be lucky this year."

However, in his first three appearances this year, Johnson notched three consecutive saves but not with ease. He yielded five hits in a total of 4⅔ innings during his first three appearances. His first save wasn't a rough assignment because Juan Marichal, a trifle tired after blanking the Astros for eight innings in the season opener, left him with a 5-0 lead in the ninth.

IN HIS FOURTH appearance April 23 in Candlestick, Johnson came on in the ninth inning with a 7-3 lead against the same Astros. He couldn't get anybody out. He faced four men. He walked two and two others doubled. That set in motion a 10-run Astro rally for a 13-7 decision.

Now, it looked like Johnson's luck really had run out. But on April 26 in Candlestick, Johnson made his fifth appearance, this time in the 10th inning against the Phillies with the score tied, 4-4. Again he was tagged for two doubles around a walk and the Phillies were ahead 6-4 — but only temporarily.

JOHNSON'S LUCK definitely had not run its course. His teammates rallied for four runs in the bottom of the 10th, Bobby Bonds delivering the decisive blow, a two-run homer.

A relief pitcher with one win and three saves despite a 9.00 ERA in five appearances during which he yielded nine hits, six runs, four walks in 5⅔ innings, such as Johnson has, has to be a lucky fellow.

BOWLING

San Rafael Man's 661 Top Mark

A 22-year-old San Rafael bowler who "had a cup of coffee in the big leagues" topped Marin County keglers this week.

Terry DeYoung, who toured the professional bowling circuit for two weeks last year, recorded a 661 series at Nave Lanes, surpassing all county competitors by at least seven pins. DeYoung, who has been bowling in Marin County for six years, started slowly but finished strong with games of 186, 218, and 257 at the Ignacio lanes.

Petaluma's Augie Rivas was next with a 654 at San Rafael's Country Club Bowl. The Professional Central California Bowlers Association representative rolled a 214, 213 and 227.

Hats off to two Marin County veteran bowlers, recently enshrined in Marin's Bowling Hall of Fame. Zeno Gelatti of San Anselmo and Dick Treadway, a former Corte Madera resident now living in Reno, were selected.

Zeno, a founder of the Marin County Bowler's Association, averaged in the 190's, while Treadway, a former MCBA president, averaged slightly more than 200 per game.

Boston, New York NHL Tilt

BOSTON (UPI)—A press clipping on the bulletin board in the Boston Bruins' dressing room quotes Vic Hadfield of the New York Rangers as saying his team was "unbeatable."

The Bruins aren't saying Hadfield is wrong. They aren't saying it but they leave you with no doubts that they're thinking it.

The Bruins and Rangers meet here Sunday in the opener of their best-of-seven series for the National Hockey League's Stanley Cup championship —a title the Bruins won only two years ago and the Rangers have failed to secure since the 1939-40 season.

"I see where Hadfield already has it won," Boston defenseman Bobby Orr said after Friday's workout. "I think it'll be a good series."

Many of the Bruins, like center Derek Sanderson, expect the series will go the full seven games.

"We're ready for them," goalie Gerry Cheevers said. "We feel sharp. We know this is going to be a tough, tough series. We know it' a different series. We had a pretty easy time of it against St. Louis, but it's not going to be that way against New York."

Boston Coach Tom Johnson said he doesn't plan to spend too much time worrying about matching forward lines with the Rangers.

"What's the sense in that," Johnson said. "At this point you don't know how your lines will be playing."

homers and 18 runs batted in.

The Giants put on their best offensive display of the season in the third inning when they scored four runs to tie the score 5-5. Speier led off with a double, Bonds tripled and Kingman and Ken Henderson followed with consecutive homers.

San Francisco went ahead on Speier's third double of the night in the sixth inning and lost an additional run when the ball bounced over the fence for a ground-rule two base hit. Chris Arnold would have scored easily from first base had the ball stayed in the park.

Montreal and San Francisco met again today with Steve Stone (0-0) pitching against Montreal's Mike Torrez (0-0).

LOSSES AVENGED

Petaluma, Tomales In Baseball Wins

In other Southern Sonoma County diamond play, Jim Leoni hurled St. Vincent to a 3-1 victory over visiting North Central League II champion Calistoga and Tomales belted Upper Lake, 9-2, to keep its NCL II title hopes alive.

Tomales reversed an early season pasting by the Cougars, thanks to the home run of Lee Soldati and Bill Zimmerman, and 12-strikeout, four-hit pitching by Russ Sartori. Soldati's was the big blow — a grand slam homer to left in the sixth. Zimmerman, who went three for four to lead the Braves, slugged his round-tripper to lead off the first inning.

Starting and losing pitcher Mike Gogan, now 0-3 in SWC games, served up nine walks in six innings, four of them coming consecutively in the first when the Hornets scored four times.

Ken Charles hit an eight-inning home run and a single to highlight Sonoma State's attack.

Terra Linda Victorious In Baseball

Terra Linda High School, reviving the Los Angeles Dodger winning formula of the mid-sixties, scraped out a 2-1 Marin County Athletic League baseball victory over San Rafael last night at Albert Park.

The Dodger formula involved tight pitching and opportunism on the basepaths. Last night the pitching was provided by Mike Sabel, who hurled a three-hitter, struck out six and did not allow a runner past second base after the first inning.

Mike Allen drove in the winning run with a fifth-inning single, breaking a 1-1 tie. Steve Withers set it up by going all the way to second base while Nick Mattos was trapped in a rundown.

The Trojans' first run came as Brian Wall walked in the fourth inning, stole second and third and scored on a wild pitch. San Rafael tallied in the opening frame on Bruce Howard's triple and losing pitcher Mike Farris' single.

Farris pitched well, allowing four hits and no earned runs. Terra Linda has managed only 14 hits in its last four games, but has won three of them.

Tierney Revenge In Tennis

Dan Tierney of Redwood High School avenged an earlier defeat at the hands of San Rafael's Dave Bacon yesterday on the San Rafael courts, winning by a 6-0, 6-0 washout the right to represent the Marin County Athletic League in the North Coast Section tennis tourney.

Tierney, defeated two weeks ago by a 6-4, 6-2 tally, will carry the MCAL's singles banner to Castro Valley for the NCS next weekend.

The doubles team representing Marin was to be determined this afternoon at the College of Marin in Kentfield, with pairs from many MCAL schools participating in a bracket tourney for the honor.

Redwood Golfers Fall

Steve Harris was co-medalist with a 42 but Redwood High School was defeated yesterday by El Camino of South San Francisco in a non-league golf match at the California Club in South San Francisco, 213-220.

Kings To Name Coach 'Soon'

By U.P.INTERNATIONAL

INGLEWOOD — The Los Angeles Kings expect to name a replacement soon for Fred Glover, their fifth coach in as many years.

General manager Larry Regan said Glover did a "creditable job" during the past ice hockey season but it was decided not to pick up his contract option.

Glover, 43, was signed last Oct. 30 three games into the season. He had been fired by the California Golden Seals after three years.

Under Glover, the Kings had an 18-42-8 record, finishing last in the Western Division of the National Hockey League.

Regan said several men were under consideration for the job and predicted a selection would be made shortly.

N.L. ROUNDUP

Torre Hot; Houston Walloped

By U.P.INTERNATIONAL

Joe Torre got hot and the Houston Astros got stopped cold.

Torre, last year's major league batting champion with a .363 batting average, raised his early-season mark to .382 with a four-for-five performance that ended the Astros' nine game win streak, 7-2.

Torre sliced a two-run triple to highlight a five-run Cardinal outburst in the sixth inning and slammed a run-scoring double as St. Louis scored twice in the ninth.

The big third baseman drove in three runs and scored a pair, including the go-ahead run on a sacrifice fly by Joe Hague.

In other National League games, New York downed Los Angeles 6-1, Atlanta walloped Pittsburgh 13-5, Chicago outslugged Cincinnati 10-8, Montreal edged San Francisco 8-6, and Philadelphia beat San Diego 3-0.

Hank Aaron sparked an eight-run sixth inning explosion for the Braves by singling twice, scoring twice and driving in a pair of runs. Pat Jarvis went five innings to receive credit for his second win against one loss. Bob Moose was the loser.

Major Crossroads For Transportation

Two major Marin transportation arteries cross near Corte Madera Creek in Larkspur, and a third will be added soon when the Golden Gate Transit Authority's ferry terminal is built on the canal at the creek's mouth. Sir Frances Drake Boulevard meanders next to the Bay from lower left to center right, crossing Highway 101 just north of Corte Madera Creek. Paralleling the highway are the now-abandoned tracks of the Northwestern Pacific Railroad. North (lower right) of the proposed ferry terminal lies the Hutchinson Co. rock quarry, one of two sites proposed, for a major shopping center in Larkspur. Route 17 runs along the lower edge of the photo. On the far side of the creek from the ferry terminal the Greenbrae Boardwalk stretches into marshland broken by Salt Marsh Creek to the south (left). Most of this marsh land is owned by William Herdt, but Frank Burke has tried six times in the past six years to have development plans approved for the area, failing most recently last week at the Corte Madera Town Council. South, (left) down Highway 101 the Corte Madera Center and Tamalpais Drive cloverleaf bring large-scale commercial development near the edge of Mill Valley. Traveling inland up Corte Madera Creek, the large square building with a courtyard is part of the Tamalpais High School campus.

WEEK'S BUSINESS

A Sharp Drop On The Market

NEW YORK (UPI)—Stock prices retreated sharply for a variety of reasons on the New York Stock Exchange this week, although there was late bargain-hunting.

Most indices showed a weakening in the overall market position.

The Dow Jones industrial average of 30 selected stocks fell 9.63 to 954.17. Aside from a small gain Wednesday and a blue chip-paced advance of 8.20 Friday, the Dow suffered losses as investors exhibited caution.

Standard & Poor's 500 stock index dropped 1.22 to 107.67 and the New York Stock Exchange common stock index closed 0.72 lower at 60.00.

With the initial impact of favorable first quarter earnings having worn off, analysts said overall news led to the decline. Stocks are overbought and overpriced and ready for a correction, many said.

Perhaps the chief contributing factor in the selling spree was the record redemption of mutual funds for March, analysts said. Observers said funds were selling their holdings to meet the liquidations.

Vietnam news wasn't thought to have had too much bearing on the decline, but analysts said investors were remaining cautious in view of the North Vietnamese advance on South Vietnam. President Nixon's Wednesday message announcing the withdrawal of 20,000 more troops had little effect on trading.

On the week, the volume slowed to 79,310,000 shares compared with 90,372,620 last week and 102,781,163 shares for the comparable week a year ago.

Of 1,923 issues crossing the tape 1,229 declined, 509 advanced.

Gulf Oil led the week's most active stocks, closing up 1-8 at 25 3-8 on 1,427,100 shares. Trading was paced by a block of 734,100 shares at 25, off 1-4, on Thursday.

Alaska Interstate was second, losing 3 1-8 to 46 on 996,100 shares. The issue turned weaker after the company terminated merger talks with Virginia International.

Republic Corp. was third, off 1 1-8 to 8 1-4 on 891,400 shares.

Polaroid was the week's biggest gainer, adding 14 1-4 to 139 3-8. The firm unveiled a new small color camera that spews out color pictures in seconds. Eastman Kodak, Polaroid's leading competitor, announced it would make film for Polaroid cameras. Kodak added 3 5-8.

Rheingold fell 6 1-8 after reporting a first quarter loss compared to a profit for the comparable period a year ago.

Oil issues generally were lower. Superior Oil was the biggest loser, off 13.

'Save Bay' Orders May Defeat Purpose

TOMORROW WILL SEE the opening of yachting season.

Boat building industry statistics indicate that California is becoming a state of boat owners. Tomorrow the sight of innumerable small craft on the bay will convey the same information much more forcefully than old statistics.

Boating grows in popularity for a variety of reasons. Chief among them are the prosperity of our times and urban and suburban congestion which lead many to seek solitude on the water.

When safely and intelligently engaged in, boating is a healthy outdoor recreational activity.

In short, the growth in yachting is highly desirable and should be encouraged.

THE BAY CONSERVATION and Devleopment Commission has properly adopted regulations aimed at conserving and protecting our bay. Much tideland has been filled and built upon as population densities have risen around the perimeter of the bay. Had not BCDC been formed, the rate of disappearance of tidelands was sure to have accelerated. The bay would have shrunk before our eyes.

BCDC regulations properly restrict and control the dumping of dredged material on adjoining tideland area. In one sense, this is proper. It puts the brakes on developers who would dredge a few channels and use the material thus brought up from the bottom to fill adjoining shallows so as to produce more usable, saleable land.

In another sense, however, dredging restrictions pose a threat. Many of our waterways —like San Rafael Canal, Petaluma River, Richardson Bay — require periodic dredging if they are not to fill themselves with silt carried in by tributary streams in the rainy season.

Even in a body as broad as San Pablo Bay, constant dredging is necessary to keep the ship channel open as Sacramento and San Joaquin River silt along with bottom mud and sand swept by tidal currents continually raise the bottom.

Supporters of overly strict BCDC regulations are fond of displaying maps showing the shrunken perimeter of the bay today compared with 100 years ago. They erroneously attribute all the shrink to the works of man.

IF WE TRULY WISH to save the bay, then, we must act also against certain natural forces, including silting and shoaling.

We must permit the dredging necessary to save and protect our existing waterways.

Until recently, dredgers were encouraged to carry spoil material to some remote, deep area of the bay or Golden Gate ocean approach and dump it beneath the waves.

Comes now the Regional Water Quality Control Board with strict new prohibitions on such dumping of dredged material, especially that tained by heavy metals or strong chemicals, as some bay bottom mud is.

Such regulations may be proper in some circumstances.

However, Army Corps of Engineers officers — charged with the responsibility for maintaining navigability of our waterways — have testified, along with recreational boating representatives, that the new regulations will make dredging costs prohibitive. Dredged spoil must be hauled a great distance out to sea or a great distance overland to suitable dump areas.

The practical result of BCDC restrictions plus Water Quality Control restrictions has been to make it well nigh impossible to continue necessary maintenance dredging. San Rafael Canal is already feeling the pinch, as is downtown Petaluma's turning basin, which is so shoaled as to discourage visits by yachtsmen.

If we are to avoid what the old saying described as "throwing out the baby with the bath water," dredging restrictions by both BCDC and the Water Quality Control Board must be made viable.

As presently constituted those restrictions pose a threat to the continued existence of our bay as we know it.

Civic Responsibility

Although we believe most Marinites are enlightened and as aware of their responsibilities for saving the environment as the next fellow, the response to the recycling collection centers for cans and bottles has not been overwhelming. Nor is this malaise confined to Marin.

Perhaps a different approach is required. Consider the fact that in 350 collection depots cans are being collected at the rate of 600 million a year, but in just six cities where magnetic separators are used in the municipal garbage dumps, steel cans are being collected at the rate of more than a billion a year.

This of course, does nothing about aluminum cans or glass or plastics. But if we can use our technology to get rid of the mess we are making, better do it on a grand scale than on a piecemeal, cottage industry level. Attractive as many features of life were in the simplistic "old days," it will require 20th Century means to rid us of our modern mess.

BOUQUETS to schools for their open house displays during Public Schools Week, many of which were very imaginative and cleverly done.

BOUQUET to Explorer Post 15 of San Anselmo for the Marin sports show which winds up tomorrow at the Civic Center. The post ran into considerable difficulties in arranging to put on the show, but triumphed over all.

BOUQUETS to the 11 citizens who have applied to fill a vacancy on the Larkspur Planning Commission. Such interest in community service speaks well for Larkspur.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Definition Offered Of Word 'Obscenity'

If the Supreme Court or any other court cannot come up with a hard and fast definition of obscenity — I can. It's "to level off beautiful hills and chop down lovely trees to make way for a 10-story building and a country setting."

Any spoiling of natural beauty is an act of desecration like killing a nightingale (can't say mockingbird) or spitting in a cathedral. One ought not!

Dams Could Supply Water, Stop Floods

There is an abundant supply of water flowing off over 2,000 acres of watershed west of Fairfax down through the Corte Madera creek.

Most of this land is tax free as it is owned by the water district and the Boy Scouts.

There are at least two good dam sites in this area which could be used to conserve this water and eliminate the flood control problem on which the Army Engineers have spent millions of Dollars.

Instead of doing this the MMWD with a series of meetings are trying to build up sentiment to pass a multimillion dollar bond issue to bring water from the north.

Why not conserve water and tax dollars at the same time?

Writer's Passions Supplant His Sanity

Answer to America's Unloyal Mr. Moore:

I admire Robert O. Moore for taking the time to bravely write his views concerning his desire that Hanoi win the war in Vietnam. I also admire the I-J for printing this letter. Most of all, I thank God that I live in a country where such opinions are allowed to be publicly expressed without fear of governmental reprisal, imprisonment, or death.

However, in writing his letter, Mr. Moore has created a clear doubt as to his wisdom and maturity. He treats the "U.S. military" as a concept — not the flesh and blood of men. Has this reality actually escaped him or has his supposed moral righteousness subverted any real concern for human suffering? I believe his passions have supplanted his sanity.

How Do You Know Pain's Gone If Advertising Doesn't Tell?

WASHINGTON — The Federal Trade Commission has attacked the advertising claims of the nation's leading nonprescription painkillers. In a strongly worded complaint, the FTC accused the major drug companies of making misleading and false claims about the effectiveness of their products. The main thrust of the complaint is that while most of the painkillers work, the drug companies, through advertising, give the false impression that there is a "significant difference between the products."

My friend, Prof. Heinrich Applebaum, believes that the FTC has gone too far. While he is an advocate of truth in advertising, he feels the government could do more damage than good by making the drug companies go honest.

"WHAT THEY HAVE NOT taken into consideration is the psychological effect that painkilling advertising can have on a headache," Applebaum told me in his Headache Research Laboratory located at the end of the runway at National Airport.

"In my studies, I have discovered that people are dependent on outrageous claims for painkillers to rid themselves of headaches. Let me show you." Applebaum took two volunteers and made them stand next to a plane taking off.

"This is the fastest way we have of giving people headaches," he explained. After the plane took off, he said to one volunteer who was holding his head, "I am going to give you two aspirin." To the other volunteer he said, "I'm going to give two Bufferin which relieves pain 'twice as fast as aspirin.' Now tell me when your headache is gone."

The person who took the Bufferin said in three minutes, "My headache is gone." The person who took the aspirin waited six minutes and then said, "My headache is gone."

"YOU SEE," Aplebaum beamed. "The psychological factor worked!"

"But how can you be sure?" I asked.

"Because the person who thought he had taken the Bufferin really took aspirin. And the person who believed he had taken aspirin was really on Bufferin."

"You're a sneaky guy, professor," I said with great admiration.

"Now, watch this experiment." The professor took a schoolteacher and placed her on a school bus with 45 grammar school children. Her face became strained and irritable and she started to scream at the children.

"I don't know what's wrong with me," she cried.

David Janssen, the actor, got on the bus and gave her two Excedrin tablets and a glass of water. "A hospital study," Janssen told the teacher, "has revealed that it takes more than twice as many aspirin tablets to give the same pain relief as two Excedrin."

In just two minutes the teacher was smiling and climbing all over the school bus seats and shouting, "I hope this trip never comes to an end!"

"Fantastic!" I exclaimed.

"NOW, I'LL SHOW you another experiment." Applebaum had two of his lab assistants wheel a piano onto the runway. He then brought over a pianist whose fingers were wracked with arthritis. The pianist could not play a note. A man in a white coat came out and said: "Anacin starts relieving pain 22 seconds after it enters your bloodstream. That is why more doctors recommend Anacin than any other pain reliever." He gave the pianist two Anacin and a stopwatch. Exactly 22 seconds later the pianist started to hit the keys of the piano and played a Chopin sonata like it had never been played before.

Professor Applebaum said, "If he hand't known how long Anacin would take to work, that man could be sitting on his piano stool for the rest of the day wracked with pain."

"You've proved that psychology certainly plays its role, professor," I said.

"As far as I'm concerned, advertising is the most important ingredient in a painkiller. In the past, the only thing that saved the people in this country was the knowledge that no matter how bad things got, they could always go down to the drugstore and get fast, fast relief.' Now the government even wants to take the fun out of having a headache."

Does Violence On Screen Add To Violence In The Streets?

WASHINGTON — The story of the murder of the Mafia figure, Joe Gallo, was carried on the front pages of practically every newspaper in Italy. Although Italy is in the middle of an election campaign in which violence is playing a part, the gang slaughter in full view of a dozen or more witnesses in a New York restaurant was considered sufficiently important to replace politics.

This has a wry twist, since the Mafia is a transplant from its home base in Sicily, where in spite of stern measures by the government in Rome it continues with an underground autonomy. As though to rival the movie, "The Godfather," the Mafia families are on a killing kick that leaves the police mulling over clues leading nowhere.

One of the biggest commercial successes in recent years and almost universally praised by the critics, "The Godfather" spills more blood and gore than a Vietnam battle scene. Block-long lines wait for admission. One can only speculate on what audiences take away from what is almost a documentary of organized crime interspersed with the pitiful social pretensions of the wealthy Mafioso.

THE VIOLENCE in movies and on television has become so pervasive as to raise a serious question about cause and effect. Does the rising crime rate, particularly among juveniles, reflect what is seen on almost every screen? A movie such as "A Clockwork Orange," with its rapes, stompings and murders, is a celebration of violence and a grim forecast of a time when all values have been erode away.

Sophisticated viewers see in a "A Clockwork Orange" an example of Stanley Kubrick's cinematographic skill. But the mass audiences in the big theaters have no such sophistication; they see murder and rape treated with a humorous casualness drained of all human compassion. The westerns on TV and in the movies often treat killing with the same casualness as the good guys wipe out the bad guys.

This drew serious study in report by a commission appointed by Surgeon Gen. Jesse L. Steinfeld on the extent of TV violence and its effect on children. The report stirred immediate controversy with the charge that it was loaded to shield the TV networks. Expressed in the jargon of the social sciences, the conclusion was that only some children already "predisposed" to violence were likely to be influenced by the violence they witnessed. But in testifying before Sen. John Pastore's subcommittee on communications, Dr. Steinfeld said that the research showed "a significant number ... of children can be adversely affected and, therefore, it requires that we do something."

"We are talking about violence for the sake of violence," Senator Pastore said in questioning Dr. Steinfeld, "violence in order to get more advertising, violence in order to get more viewers. There is one significant statement in the report — that apparently the violence increases according to the rating, which is a very significant thing, too. So, if we are getting violence for the sake of profit, greed, that is something that should be entirely eliminated."

THE REPORT ALSO developed that violence is often used to hold audiences through the commercials. The gun is pointed just as the commercial is to go on. The viewers wait on edge through the sell to see who gets killed.

With the hearings completed, the Pastore committee laid down instructions for a violence measurement. The surgeon general, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and the Federal Communications Commission were instructed to come up with standards whereby appreciable differences in the volume of violence can be determined from year to year. This is considered especially important for children's programs, since in most of the cartoon sequences everybody gets zapped every other minute. Consideration is also to be given to the content of the commercials.

The theory is that with a violence measurement the networks can be monitored and there will be no question of censorship or infringement of the right to publish and show. A recent report told of the marked increase in crimes of violence committed by young girls. Parents' groups throughout the country are increasingly concerned over the cause-and-effect relationship between violence on the screen and violence in the streets and on the playgrounds. It is a warning that censorship will come next if voluntary restraints are not applied.

Hard To Be Sure Of Proportions In Complex, Spun-Out ITT Case

The ITT case drags on. We have long since gone through the Dita Beard chapter. Now it's the Flanigan chapter. This may be close to the end. Some hope so; others don't.

The trouble about the whole ITT case is that it's so hard to be sure of the proportions.

ON THE ONE HAND there is nothing new about a big business interest or corporation taking its case for special treatment to the White House and comingaway with what it wants. This has been going on in Washington since the days of Alexander Hamilton. It happens in every administration.

The biggest single activity in Washington is trying to influence government to one's own advantage. The city is jammed with lawyers and public relations artists whose livelihood is made from helping people who live and work elsewhere to get something from Washington.

The label usually put on such activities is "lobbying." The word is frequently used pejoratively. It need not have an unsavory implication. After all, the purpose of government is to help the individual citizen in his "pursuit of happiness." A corporation, even if very big, is still a legal person. It is not inherently immoral (although some of its actions can be). There is nothing necessarily improper about the search for favors in Washington. Yet sometimes improper things are done in that search.

THE QUESTION always was and still is to be drawn between the proper and the improper.

Take the case, for example, of the so-called "highway lobby." It consists of enterprises interested in selling automobiles, trucks, gasoline, tires, concrete and highway steel; all the people who make money out of a proliferation of highways and the use thereof. They do not make as much money out of building railway lines either on the surface or underground.

The "highway lobby" has done everything in its power for years to block the building of an underground rapid transit system for Washington. It delayed that system by a quarter of a century. It currently is waging a defensive action to try to prevent the funds built up from gasoline taxes being used for other than highway building.

This is self-interest lobbying. Those who engage in it argue that their welfare is in the general public interest. Sometimes it probably is, but not as often as the lobbyists for some special cause like to contend. We suspect that due to the "highway lobby" the building of highways in the United States has enjoyed a higher priority than serves the general interest.

WHERE THE WHOLE business gets out of line is when too much is paid for something of dubious value to the public interest.

Was it in the public interest for ITT to be let out of an antitrust suit? We don't know because the case never came to trial for a test.

Was there a conscious connection between that loophole for ITT and the funds granted, and more promised, for putting the Republican convention into San Diego? We don't know. The circumstances are highly suspicious, but the evidence is not decisive.

The trouble with the whole thing is that it looks bad. It looks like Republicans are being too considerate of corporate interests of dubious value to the public welfare.

The whole thing leaves us with a wish that somehow could and finance themselves without being quita so dependent on big money from big corporations, just as we wish Democrats could get along without quite so much big money from big labor unions.

The ITT case is not provably (yet) one of selling big favors for big money. But it leaves an unpleasant taste in the mouth and is too uncomfortably reminiscent of how things were done in the days of Warren Harding.

Polish Youth Helping To Change The National Mood Of Frustrated Country

EDITOR'S NOTE — Monitor correspondent Eric Bourne recently visited Poland for the first time in three years. Under the Gierek regime, he reports, the national mood is one of growing 'Polish-ness' and rapport between the people and their government. Here are Bourne's impressions of present-day Poland.)

By ERIC BOURNE

News Service

WARSAW — One of Poland's best-known Communist "liberals" opens the door of his office to escort us to the lift.

He has just been elected to Parliament.

Four intelligent looking youngsters are waiting for him. One, a pretty blonde girl, throws an arm around his shoulders and kisses him on the cheek.

"Kongratulacije!" she exclaims warmly, and the boys beam approval and shake his hand.

He looks very pleased.

As a candidate of the National Unity Front — which makes all the nominations, leaving the voters no alternative choices — he would have been elected whatever.

But he had been listed third of the three candidates on the ballot. Yet he, the youngest, most liberal minded one, gained a bigger vote than his two colleagues. To his young friends, this is a matter for warm congratulations.

Something similar has happened in many other Polish constituencies.

WE ENTER a candle-lit restaurant popular with young people. It is very full, and we must share a table.

At one, a bearded youth and his girl are singing softly to taped music from the bar. "May we sit down?" we ask, and they assent. The boy asks, "Do you mind if we go on singing?"

We notice that the couple — like the others around — is sipping only glasses of light wine or Western soft drinks. Most East European regimes now have allocated considerable hard currency for investment in soft drink production in their efforts to check youthful use of hard liquor.

It was not like that in the last frustrated years of the unimaginative regime the Poles threw out in December, 1970.

Alcoholism is still an acute Polish problem. (Visiting schools and local halls that were used as polling stations, one saw that each and every one has pictorial displays pointing out the evils of alcohol and damage to personality.)

BUT WHEN MAKING a round of some of their favorite night spots here, one gets an impression that among youth, at least, the campaign, combined with less frustrating political conditions, has begun to bring about a change of habit.

There is a strong appeal to youth — all, remember born since the last war — in the new regime's program. Youth posters proclaim: "You are a citizen of Poland, make good use of your rights!"

A million teen-agers voted for the first time last month. Even within the limits of the Polish system they managed to boost the vote totals for a fresh, younger generation of lawmakers.

A Warsaw editor who has been lecturing student groups about ratification of the Polish-West German treaty and the outlook for East-West detente says: "Invariably some young person asks if detente will mean the building of pan-European highways" including Poland.

Already they have had their hopes boosted by the beginning of passport — and visa-free travel — with just their everyday identity card — in most of Eastern Europe, and by the "open frontier" between East Germany and Poland instituted last Jan. 1.

Nearly two million Poles and East Germans have since availed themselves of this opportunity of "instant" shopping trips and pleasure jaunts at will.

"BEFORE," SAYS a housewife, "if I needed a dozen things I would have to go to as many shops. Now I can get the lot on a single trip to just one store."

Removal of frustrations like this housewife's have done as much as anything to bring about the immense change of atmosphere visible to this writer after three years' absence from Poland.

Change, however, is not only in higher wages, or stabilized economy, and fine new self-service stores. Or the virtual abolition of the waiting list for cars, with the Polish Fiat now rolling off the assembly line — another 50,000 this year — and available for cash with immediate delivery. Or the big cuts in duty on imported cars.

It is also a change of national mood. A striking example: After a few days here, anyone familiar with postwar Poland must realize an absence of one of the familiar ingredients — Polish cynicism and, above all, the often "sick" humor of the Gomulka years.

You ask journalists and their ilk, who previously would spill them out as soon as you met, "What's happened to the political jokes?"

"THERE ARE NONE, or very few — and those there are, are very mild," an editor friend replies. "People now are in a serious mood — too serious for that old kind of crack."

He remarks also: "We have grown out of the romanticism of '56 (the Polish "October," with its dreams of a new era, which faded in a few brief years). That is a good thing. Throughout our history we Poles have so often been unreal, overly romantic.

"What we have now is a more solidly founded movement, one that sees the possibilities but recognizes also the realities."

No one, then, is wildly optimistic. Many are skeptical still. But there are also widespread signs of a new spirit in place of the blank despair and alienation that gripped Poland through the 1960s.

"REFORM" is not forseen as sweeping, radical changes. The major change is qualitative, and the regime's ajor achievement is a restoration of cmmunication between government and people.

In party leader Edward Gierek's language this means removal of the "painful disproportions" of the previous decade; a "growth of trust between rulers and ruled"; and the restoration of "workers' rights."

In concrete terms it means wage incentives, including a better bonus system already yielding results in better production, and a record housing drive, not only for 160,000 new homes this year and a million by 1975, but also for more per capita living space and more concern for good building and interior convenience as well.

Even this will leave a long queue. But that is the burden of the problem.

People are quieter, more satisfied, because now they are informed. Under the Gomulka regime, the Politburo was a cabal. Now everyone knows it meets every Tuesday. Newspapers carry prompt reports on party and Cabinet meetings.

GIEREK'S OWN style commends itself to the people. His 99.80 per cent poll in last month's elections must be seen in that light. It was noted, too, that associates who had set out to establish his kind of rapport with the workers polled better than many who were still "suspect."

On one election visit to a factory, he found the workers spruced up in new overalls. "They were issued this morning," they told him. When he saw the shining new canteen equipment, they said, "We got that this morning, too."

"All right," Gierek curtly told the management, "I'll come by another day," and left.

He offers the country as a whole the same opportunities achieved by the miners in his native Silesia, which he led to a high degree of efficiency and local prosperity before he became party leader 16 months ago.

Before the Baltic shipyard workers "exploded" in December, 1970, they had been complaining for years that despite their contribution to a shipbuilding boom that had benefited the whole economy, they were worse off than most. Now they are up with the miners.

WORKERS IN key industries are being given housing priorities, and private peasant farmers — who hold 89 per cent of the agricultural land — now qualify for free medical care like anyone else.

To dogmatists who criticize "inequalities," the answer given is that the nation can "count only on its honest work, efficiently organized and wisely managed" and that, above all, those who work best must be rewarded best.

Where is all this leading Poland?

Everyone here is mindful of the scope of reform permissible in Eastern Europe as well as the international, ideological implications of the Communist bloc alliance.

That is why Poles look with such interest now at Hungary, which has not only restructured the management of its economy, but has ended much of the old regime's oppressiveness without running into the hazards that wrecked the Czechs.

POLES HAVE grown in confidence, knowing that they brought about a change of government and that no outsiders, particularly Russians, deemed it prudent to interfere. The new regime itself draws confidence from the fact that it required no outside "help" to "restore order" after the 1970 riots.

Its concern is to encourage this new sense of pride — not "nationalism" of a narrow or aggressive kind but a deeply felt sense of "national" Polishness evident in almost all one's contacts and observation.

Within this framework, however, the trend is toward a more "Polish" and more tolerant society, with, for example, noncollectivized agriculture and concessions to the Roman Catholic Church. All of this is quite different from orthodox practice elsewhere in the bloc.

CENSORSHIP REMAINS. But most Polish writers seem content with the compromise with the regime reflected at their recent congress, which restored many liberal voices to their old places in the literary world. Their intent obviously is to support the present consensus and avoid extravagant proposals that could only embarrass Gierek.

What do the Russians think about it? Poles who would be the first to feel the pinch if there were interference assure you very firmly there is none. They also recall Gomulka's effective rebuff to Nikita S. Khrushchev in 1956 and point out that pressure now would certainly be even more counterproductive.

A CHANGING POLAND — Poland's youth is emerging as the group which is helping to bring about a growing nationalism, long absent from the country which has been plagued with many years of frustrating political conditions.

"There is no need for it anyway," they say. "The crucial thing for us is that the new link between regime and people be preserved. And this is our business — it depends on ourselves."

Within this context of "tolerances" and domestic confidence, all but the most skeptical here tell you they see ahead, however much uphill, a better Poland.

CONSUMER PROTECTION

Sweden Getting Tough On False Advertising

STOCKHOLM (UPI) — In Sweden if it's advertised as orange juice it must be orange juice, not a synthetic product. The KO — consumer ombudsman konsumentombudsman in Swedish — sees to that.

The consumer ombudsman or KO functions under the 1971 Unfair Competition Act and his main activity is to guard against false or misleading advertising in any medium.

In one of the first cases, the KO moved against a company which, in an ad, showed a glass full of orange juice placed between a split orange. The juice was completely synthetic in content. The ombudsman took the company to Market Court, established to back up the KO, and it ruled the ad misleading. The company withdrew it.

ACCORDING TO Sven Heurgren, who is the consumer ombudsman, this is a pertinent example of what his office is supposed to do.

"Truth in advertising is very much society's business," he said in an interview, "and we are protecting the consumer."

By calling, the 40-year-old, fair-haired Heurgren is a judge. As KO, he heads an office of 20 fulltime staff members who keep close watch on all business practices directly relating to the consumer. "Misleading information," he said, "can apply to the nature of goods and services, their characteristics, price, quality, durability, nutritive value in foods, and so on."

There has been some complaint in the business community about the KO's powers, but not significantly. Swedes are accustomed to ombudsmen. There already are the justice ombudsman, the military ombudsman, the press ombudsman, among others. Essentially their funtion is to act on complaints by the public. "We act for the little man," as Heurgren put it.

IN THE FIRST year of the KO. Heurgren's office received 2,500 complaints. Most of the complaints came from individuals but some also were listed by business firms against other business firms alleging unfair practice, and some were brought by consumer protective agencies.

SVEN HEURGREN
Sweden's consumer watchdog

All complaints are examined but not necessarily acted upon. About half of last year's complaints were deemed to require action by the KO. The others. Heurgren said, either were frivolous or without substance.

One complaint was made against a retailer who advertised anchovies as a hangover cure. The KO ruled that the claim was humorous and obviously so and the complaint was rejected. In another case, however, a sausage maker who put too few sausages into too large a package was required to change his packaging.

WORLD WAR II'S MIGHT

Rusting Ships Hold Many Memories

By JAMES O. CLIFFORD

VALLEJO (UPI) — The "fightingest ship" of World War II sits idle in a long line of mothballed vessels, her decks littered with rusty paint chips as she awaits her fate.

For the U.S.A. O'Brannon, holder of 20 battle stars, it looks like the scrap heap. The O'Bannon, dubbed the "fightingest ship" by the Navy itself, is one of 40 inactive vessels at the Mare Island Naval Shipyard north of San Francisco. Another 42 ships are located two hours drive away at the subordinate inactive fleet at Stockton.

There are other famous names among the vessels, such as the submarine Pampanito and the guided missile heavy cruiser Canberra, but few World War II ships still afloat boast histories equalling the little 376 foot destroyer O'Bannon, whose men nicknamed her "Fighting Irish."

Lt. John Bryan, 41, executive officer in charge of the vessels at the two facilities, says in May he will report to the Navy that the O'Bannon can be put up for sale as scrap.

BRYAN, WHOSE office overlooks the submarine Bashaw, on which he once served as engineering officer, said men who served on the ships often come with their families to show them the vessels.

"We have to warn them that the ships are not in the same condition they were when they were last aboard." he said.

Some of the ships are being stripped of anything useful, but others, such as the destroyer Scott, are what the layman calls "mothballed."

"Some of these ships could be ready in very little time if the Navy needed them," Bryan said. "Dry air is circulated through them all the time. This keeps the machinery and electrical gear in the same shape as when the air conditioning system was put in."

HE SAID IT usually takes about 60 days to "get a ship completely dry and seal up the leaks."

The O'Bannon has none of the eleborate sealing cocoons that mark the preserved "dry air" ships.

"I think it is a shame to see all this history just rotting away," said Pat Smith of Seattle, a petty officer third class who sometimes takes visitors through the ships. "I guess I've taken 12 men through the O'Bannon last year. Most of them are really shocked."

The O'Bannon's wheel, bell and battle ribbons that once were attached to her bridge all have been sent to Washington for storage. There's little to show she was the ship of which Adm. William F. Halsey said:

"The history of the Pacific war can never be written without telling the story of the U.S.S. O'Bannon."

A TABLE IN the room where the officer of the day stood duty still carries the shamrock symbol of the O'Bannon, and her motto, "Second to None," is emblazoned on her funnel covers. Otherwise she has been picked clean.

The O'Bannon, named after a Marine hero of the war with the Tripoli pirates, has a long list of sinkings to her credit. Her finest hour came during the battle of Guadalcanal when she took on the Japanese battleship Hiyei in the struggle to prevent fresh enemy reinforcements from landing to fight embattled U.S. Marines.

The destroyer got so close to her huge foe that the Japanese vessel was unable to depress her guns enough to hit the American. The O'Bannon fired away as 14-inch shells passed harmlessly over her crewmen's heads.

In the midst of the fight the Japanese heavyweight suddenly was enveloped in a sheet of incandescent flame. David had beated Goliath.

THIS WAS THE battle in which the cruiser San Francisco suffered such extensive damage she later was broken up for scrap.

Smith said when former O'Bannon crewmen come aboard they seldom talk about this famous battle but prefer to recall the time they sunk a Japanese submarine — with potatoes.

The official Navy version says that in April, 1943, the O'Bannon blasted the conning tower from a Japanese submarine with her five-inch gun. The sub was unable to submerge and armed Japanese sailors poured from the hull as the O'Bannon pulled alongside. This time it was the O'Bannon who couldn't depress her gun at such close range, and the American sailors were unarmed. One quick-witted blue-jacket dashed below to break open a crate of potatoes.

The Americans hurled potatoes and at least one Japanese was knocked overboard. Finally the two vessels were far enough apart for the five-incher to sink the submarine. The next day Adm. Halsey sent the O'Bannon a message congratulating the crew on "your ingenuity in making use of all available weapons."

SMITH SAID the visiting O'Bannon veterans — including a full commander — tell the story differently. He said crewmen say a sailor was peeling potatoes outside the galley when the sub popped up. He continued:

"They said he started throwing the potatoes at the Japanese sailors who apparently thought he was tossing grenades," Smith said. "They ran below so fast they forgot to close the hatches and the sub sank when she flooded while diving."

Whatever happens to the O'Bannon, Smith said, he hopes she doesn't meet the same fate as the World War II destroyer Stanly that recently was towed away for scrap by Japanese tugboats.

This Week In The World

By United Press International

A flotilla of 16 canoes bobbed in Sandy Hook Bay off Leonardo, N. J. as the Navy munitions ship Nitro approached.

The ship moved slowly past the canoes, carrying antiwar demonstrators, as it headed for the Atlantic Ocean. Then a cheer went up from the demonstrators. First one sailor, then another jumped overboard. Seven in all went over the side and tried to swim to the canoes. But Coast Guard vessels picked all of them up and returned them to the Nitro.

President Nixon told a national television audience that the bombing raids on North Vietnam will continue as long as the invasion of South Vietnam goes on.

But he announced that another 20,000 U.S. troops will be pulled out of Vietnam by July. And he expressed confidence that progress would be made in the Paris peace talks.

The talks resumed Thursday with more public accusations from both sides. And Communist negotiators said the U.S. claim that South Vietnam had been invaded was absurd.

The only hope for real progress appeared to depend on the arrival of Le Duc Tho, North Vietnam Politburo member.

He participated in secret negotiations with the United States in the past and indications were that he would be doing so again.

Around The World, Around The Clock

ABOARD USS TICONDEROGA — Three huge orange-and-white striped parachutes lowered the Apollo 16 command ship into the blue-green seas 1,500 miles south of Honolulu. The 1,391,000-mile trip to the moon ended almost exactly onarget for astronauts Thomas Mattingly, Charles Duke and John Young. Space agency geologists were highly pleased with the mission and say rock samples Duke and Young obtained may overturn carefully constructed theories on the biroon.

WASHINGTON — The Senate hearing room was overheated and crowded with reporters. Sen. Edmund S. Muskie was announcing his withdrawal from active campaigning for the Democratic presidential nomination. Delthe Mainet grin that he felt relaxed. Muskie suffered bad losses in the Wisconsin, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania primaries, but he said a lack of money was his main reason for getting out of the campaign.

PEKING — Each day thousands of Chinese visit the open paddock at the Peking Zoo where the two musk oxen named Mathilda and Milton live. One correspondent says most visitors leave making derogatory remarks about the musk oxen because they have a skin disease and are losing their hair. The animals, a gift from President Nixon, are causing Americans to lose much face, the correspondent says.

How A 102-Year Old Church Maintains Its Vitality

By JOSEPH E. SPURGEON
(Reprinted from the Presbyterian Layman)

SAN DIEGO — How can a big-city, downtown church with 3,500 members continue strong and on the move in these days of denominational decline?

The First Presbyterian Church of San Diego has every outward reason to be otherwise. It is 102-years-old.

The city around it has changed from horse-and-buggy streets to swirling freeways, crowded parking lots, and a mixture of bypassed small businesses and diehard old houses. Why wasn't First Church demolished long ago to make way for "progress"?

Unlike most old, city churches, First Presbyterian of San Diego is alive and dynamic. Exciting things are happening here. One visit with the people, and a few minutes with their pastor, the Rev. Robert Hall Mayo, shows you why.

Although the sanctuary seats 1,600 and three worship services are held each Sunday, large continuing membership is not counted a measure of success; it is a result of something good

The real power in this congregation comes from their Christ-centered attitude and approach to each other, to the local community, and to the world.

The congregation and community are ministered to by nine pastors, 45 elders and trustees, 28 deacons and 54 deaconesses. While their faith is firmly rooted in the Scriptures, it is evident that their eyes and hearts are open to the rest of the human race.

"The God of heaven, he will prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build" (Neh. 2:20). This verse could be First Presbyterian's motto; while they are building, it is evident tpat God is prospering. Westminster Manor, a long-range project to provide housing for the elderly was completed last year.

The 16-story, 156-apartment building across the street from the church is now home for 105 single women, 16 single men and 34 couples who can attend Golden Hours, Family Night events and other church services and meetings.

Rancho Del Cielo (Sky Ranch) is a 440-acre retreat center in the mountains where all in the church can "go forth under the open sky and list to nature's teachings." A permanent location for retreats and outings, it also is another church-owned building project. Many of the facilities have been built by members of the congregation.

Christian Education in 1971 was marked by consistent growth in Sunday school attendance, plus keen interest in new ideas. In a month-long "Focus on Family" program, a "Family Experiment" program and a family retreat, adults studied and struggled with issues involving the Christian home.

A June Family Daily Vacation Bible School surpassed all attendance expectations. Juniors held their own worship services regularly in a large chapel. Twelve hundred young people participated in a "Street Christian Music" meeting conducted by Larry Normen, a member of the United Presbyterian Liberation Front. He sang his own song, "Wait 'Til It Happens to You" at last year's General Assembly. Twenty-three hundred jammed the sanctuary to hear Nicky Cruz, former New York gang member turned crusade evangelist, after which 130 committed their lives to Christ.

Denny Rydberg, Christian Education Youth Minister, was leader of the Jesus People evangelistic thrust at the 183rd General Assembly. This faith is placed in the integrity and honesty of our fellowman.

But what has happened to our faith in our all-sufficient God?

On a Sunday evening three years ago, we received a call from the dean of the college in which our son, David, was a student. He told us that David had been killed that afternoon in a rock climbing accident on Mt. Cannon in New Hampshire.

We were stunned. Shock gave way to feelings of terrible hurt and the heartbreaking realization that we would never see David again on this earth.

Suddenly we were face to face with the very big question: Would the faith in our Lord which we all professed prove too intangible and unseen to fill our desperate need? Would it be inadequate for this crisis? Would our only comfort come from our friends and family?

In the face of overwhelming grief it is easy to see why so many young people, particularly, are drawn into groups which claim outward manifestations and signs proving the power and reality of God.

For many years First Church volunteers have staffed a large canteen for servicemen one Sunday each month. In 28 years, 116,000 servicemen have committed their lives to Chirst after hearing gospel messages at this center.

As remarkable as anything is the fact that in 1971 First Church financial receipts exceeded the budget by $26,000 in a year when denominational stewardship was seriously curtailed. All commitments were met, and this church now operates on a two-month emergency reserve fund; just three years ago the budget was hand-to-mouth.

Individuals, seeing God's work in the church, have contributed many special gifts. Some of the largest were given anonymously. At Christmas time a $100 bill was slipped under the church office door.

"Remarkable!" responded Dr. Mayo. "God has prospered us. And building on faith, we optimistically look to the future."

Marinites Fly To Dedication In Panama

Attending the weekend dedication and the faith's international conference on Monday and Tuesday will be Mel and Karen Magliocco, Earnest and Sue Jones, Deanna Folster and Christie Heller, San Rafael; Wayne Lenhard of Terra Linda; Carol Noah and daughter, Kelly, of Lucas Valley; Carol Reyes of San Anselmo; Maria del Carmen Ryes of Ross; Diane Maghzi of Mill Valley; Vicky Thompson and Diane Edwards of Novato, and Red Chandler and Greg Edwards of Point Reyes.

Following the dedication, a Baha'i Intercontinental Conference will be held in Panama City and will be attended by the Marin Baha'is.

Some four thousand Baha'is from around the world, including about 800 Baha'is from the United States, are expected to attend.

The Baha'i House of Worship in Panama will be the fifth such in the world. Others are located at or near Frankfurt, Germany; Sydney, Australia; Kampala, Uganda, and Wilmette, Ill.

The Panama Temple is the first completely round building in Panama and has cost over $1 million. It is located seven miles north of Panama City atop the 738 foot Cerro Sonsonate (Singing Mountain).

The edifice's base is an elongated nine-pointed star in the center of which is an auditorium and balcony area. A parabolic dome covers both the auditorium and balcony areas. It is made of reinforced concrete and the dome will be covered with mosaic tiles. The design on the exterior star points is pre-Columbian.

The National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the Republic of Panama is host for the dedication and conference.

The Baha'i Faith is a world religion that originated in Persia in 1844, and is presently established in over 317 countries and territories.

The National Baha'i Center is in Wilmette, and the Baha'i World Center is located on Mount Carmel in the Holy Land.

An all-night Vigil of Reparation and Prayer for Peace will be held May 5 and 6 at the Dominican Convent Chapel on Grand Avenue in San Rafael.

It is being sponsored by the Blue Army of Our Lady of Fatima, Legion of Mary and the Third Order of Mary in Marin County.

A Latin Mass at 8 p.m. on May 5 will open the vigil. It will be followed by a benediction, enrollment in the Brown Scapular and will conclude with a Latin Mass at 5 a.m. on May 6.

Rev. George Kathrein, CSR, will be in charge of the vigil which will also include a rosary, stations of the cross, homilies and meditations.

Asks Application For 'God's Power'

MINNEAPOLIS (UPI) — The purpose and mission of the church in the world is to bring God's power to bear in all human life, says Dr. Kent S. Knutson, president of the American Lutheran Church.

In an address to the C-400 Club of Concordia College, Moorhead, Minn., Dr. Knutson said God's power should be projected and applied by the college to serve the needs of all men. "Man's life is thus shaped by values which embody the Judeo-Christian tradition," he said.

Catholic Scholars Join Bible Group

NEW YORK (UPI)—Two Roman Catholic scholars have become the first of their faith to become members of the Joint Committee which sponsors "The New English Bible" in Great Britain, says the Oxford University Press.

They are Bishop B. C. Butler, auxiliary Bishop to the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster and President of St. Edmund's College at Ware, and Father James Foley of St. Peter's College, Cardross. Bishop Butler represents the Catholic Church in England and Father Foley the Church in Scotland. Hitherto, Catholics have been observers of the work of the "New English Bible" translation but not full members of the committee.

FACULTY REJECTS SCRIPTURE PLANS

Concordia Teachers Unanimously Reject Synod Leader's Proposal; No Dialogue

ST. LOUIS (LC) — The faculty of Concordia Seminary here, firmly rejecting "guidelines" for scriptural interpretation aid down by Dr. J.A.O. Preus, president of the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, has issued a statement sharply criticizing the church leader for not discussing his concerns with them.

A statement which received "virtually unanimous" approval from the 48 faculty members declared that the guidelines are "invalid both as an assessment and a solution of the presumed problems at the seminary."

The faculty declaration scored Dr. Preus for not "sharing his concerns with us," and stated that "for more than a year" the synod president declined "repeated invitations to meet with us about concerns we have had about his dealings with us."

"We do not consider the positions rejected in President Preus' statement to be descriptive of our teaching," the faculty members said.

The synod president had prepared a lengthy statement defining principles for interpreting scripture an distributed the statement throughout the 2.8 million member denomination. Dr. Preus' statement contained a catalog of positions which he said synod doctrine "rejected."

"It is a gross injustice to us," the faculty paper said; "to permit anyone to infer that the faculty of this seminary holds the views rejected" in Dr. Preus' document.

Dr. Preus said he was "deeply disappointed" in the faculty response, and added that in raising "procedural" questions, "the faculty has once again evaded the basic theological issue."

"Perhaps there are so many varying viewpoints within the faculty that the faculty is completely ineffective to address itself as a group to the theological issues as I have requested," the synod president stated.

The issue of doctrinal orthodoxy at Concordia, the largest Lutheran seminary in the United States has been smoldering for several years. A fact-finding committee made an intensive investigation into teaching at the school, and has made its report to the synod president. Presumably, Dr. Preus' statement is based on the report of the fact-finding committee.

That same report was given to the seminary's board of control, and the faculty complained that President Preus "should not have reported to the synod on a matter that is in the hands of the seminary's board of control before presented a report to him."

The faculty statement said it feared that President Preus "on his own initiative is now endeavoring to set up a standard for the Board of Control to follow."

Early this year, the synod president, the board, and seminary president Dr. John Tietjen clashed over the rehiring of Dr. Arlis Ehlen, a professor of Old Testament. Dr. Preus contended that the professor's views were in conflict with synodical teaching and demanded that he be dropped from the faculty. The board, however, rehired Dr. Ehlen for one year, and Dr. Tietjen declined to obey a directive from President Preus ordering him to see that Dr. Ehlen did not teach any classes in scripture.

Dr. Preus then issued his "guidelines" which call for a strictly literal interpretation of the Bible, and requested a faculty response.

Besides asserting that the president's "guidelines" do not accurately reflect the teaching at the school, the faculty contended that the synod's president's statement is unnecessary, the procedure he used in making it improper, and that the "guidelines" make "binding dogma out of mere theological opinion."

That last allegation may lead to further conflicts between Dr. Preus and the faculty, since the synod president contended that "every sentence in these theses is derived directly from the Scriptures and the Lutheran Confessions."

The faculty statement disagreed, arguing that Dr. Preus' declaration contains views on which neither Scripture nor the Lutheran Confessions have spoken definitively. They also suggested that Dr. Preus was unable to provide a biblical or confessional basis for some assertions in his "guidelines."

At the close of their statement, the faculty asserted that distributing the synod president's "guidelines" throughout the synod was a divisive tactic, and that the distribution "has caused disturbances in congregations and in the synod at large."

The faculty added that the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod has been marked throughout 125 years of history, for its "unqualified acknowledgement of the primacy of the Gospel."

OF GOD AND MAN

Patience Difficult To Practice

By LOUIS CASSELS
By U. P. International

The dictionary defines patience as "calm endurance of a trying situation or person."

It is a virtue we readily commend to others. But some of us find it exceedingly difficult to practice.

One is putting up with people who annoy us, bore us, interrupt our work, make unreasonable demands, talk too much or otherwise grate on our nerves.

The Apostle Paul, who recognized that he personally had only a tenuous grip on this virtue, spoke of patience as a form of love.

"Love is patient and kind," he said. "It is not irritable or resentful ... Love bears all things, endures all things."

Impatient people sometimes seek to justify their irritable responses by pointing out they were subjected to severe provocation. But the Bible does not regard this ever as a sufficient excuse. It is precisely the most trying people, the scriptures insist, to whom we owe the greatest patience.

"Be patient toward ALL men," Paul admonished the early Christians at Thessalonica.

But patience means more than maintaining a kindly tolerance toward difficult people. Both in dictionary definitions and scriptural usage, the word also denotes a cheerfully resigned acceptance of situations.

This kind of patience is especially important to people who are chronically or incurably ill, crippled or otherwise burdened with physical handicaps. A prayer for the sick written more than 400 years ago and still used in Episcoal and other Anglican churches, includes these words:

"O Father of mercies and God of all comfort, our only help in time of need; We humbly beseech thee to behold, visit, and relieve thy sick servant ... and give him patience under his affliction."

The third type of patience which the Bible mentions is patience with God.

Although the tendency is perhaps more pronounced in our day, men always have been inclined to be impatient with God. They cannot understand why he does not intervene more promptly and pervasively to right the wrongs of the world. Many of the Psalms of the Old Testament are cries of impatience to a God who seems to tarry overlong in coming to the rescue of those who trust in Him.

"I am worn out, Lord, waiting for you to save me," complains the writer of the 119th Psalm. And the 141st Psalm says peremptorily:

"I call to you, Lord; help me NOW."

But another psalmist warns that men who would know God and walk in His ways must learn to "wait patiently" for Him to reveal Himself and His will.

"The Lord is all that I have; therefore I will wait for him patiently. It is good to wait in patience and sigh for deliverance by the Lord."

Characteristically, Biblical writers never try to explain, much less to justify, God's refusal to intervene instantly in every situation where His help is sought. They might have pointed out that if He did so, human beings would lose the dignity of free choice which is theirs by virtue of living in a relatively stable natural world where "the rain falls on the just and the unjust alike."

But they never tried to offer excuses for God as modern theologians so often feel impelled to do. It was suffient for them that He was the Lord God Almighty, creator, sustainer and sovereign ruler of the universe.

Community Impact Teams Take To Field

I-J Special Reports

PACIFIC GROVE (LC) — "Community Impact" teams infiltrated the Carmel-Monterey area todayduring the 54th convention of the California and Nevada District of The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, which ends tomorrow.

Impact teams will participate in various forms of outreach to varying communities:

Traditional canvass of an integrated neighborhood.

Mingle with military personnel in different locations.

Meet residents of retirement communities.

Assume the role of a sidewalk reporter, complete with tape recorder and microphone.

Relate with college students.

Invite people to join a guitar-playing team in a "sing-along."

Attract passersby to artists painting religious scenes.

Hand out smile buttons, Scripture portions, and other material.

The "Community Impact" feature was planned today to implement the convention theme, "Come See ... Go Tell." Rev. Paul W. F. Harms, director of drama at Concordia Senior College, Fort Wayne, Ind., was to explore the theme in a four-part essay.

Other featured speakers at the convention were to be Dr. R. P. Wiedersaenders of St. Louis, first vice president of The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, and Dr. Oliver Harms of St. Louis, immediate past president of the church body which includes Marin churches.

The convention began Thursday and will conclude tomorrow.

Civil Ceremonies

MANILA (UPI)—Filipino city dwellers prefer being married in civil ceremonies rather than in church, says a sociological study by the University of the Philippines. The study covered 362 couples selected randomly from different social classes in Manila and nearby Quezon City.

Service To Be Directed By Laymen

Lay members of Shepherd of the Hills Lutheran Church in Tiburon will have charge of tomorrow's 10 a.m. service.

Leonard Peck will be the liturgist and will conduct the service.

Lt. Cmd. Dolph Jaeger will be the lector and Dr. Kenneth Borchardt will deliver the sermon.

According to Rev. R. D. Lechleitner, church pastor, "The Lutheran principle of the priesthood of all believers has influenced the practices in the church through the centures."

"Some of the national church bodies have been structured to place laymen in control of program and policy decisions," he added.

"This special service will reemphasize this," he concluded.

Lutheran Seminary Enrollments Drop

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Lutheran Council in the USA reports that enrollment in Lutheran seminaries in the United States and Canada declined slightly in 1971 while enrollment in Lutheran four-year colleges increased about 2 per cent.

A total of 4,290 students are enrolled at 20 Lutheran seminaries in both countries, compared with 4,598 in 1970.

AN OFFER OF HELP
Life can seem pretty rough sometimes. Greed, carelessness and anger can get to you, if you let them.
But many people have found something that is helping them hold on—something that is restoring peace and order and purpose in their lives. It's a deeper knowledge of God, gained through reading the Bible and the Christian Science textbook.
Come in and read them yourself. Or borrow them to read at home, without charge.

Glove Question Enters Painter's Fatal Plunge

By PAUL E. PETERZELL

The death of a painter who fell last week from the Golden Gate Bridge may have been prevented if bridge officials had issued painters canvas gloves instead of cheaper rubber gloves, a director the bridge district said yesterday.

Director Daniel F. Del Carlo, secretary-treasurer of the San Francisco Building Trades Council, said rubber gloves were issued instead of canvas "because they're cheaper." He said it was "the first time I ever heard of painters using rubber gloves; rubber gloves are not safe."

Other district officials, however, quickly stressed that the painter did not have his safety strap fastened when he fell. They declined to specualte on whether the painter might have had a better chance of holding on to something as he fell if he had been wearing canvas instead of rubber gloves.

Andy Leroy Caton, 30, of Petaluma, fell to his death on April 20.

He was the second painter to die in a fall from the bridge since it opened almost 35 years ago. That first accident was five years ago, and triggered charges of negligence against bridge officials.

The 1967 fall took the life of Lee R. Patrick of San Anselmo. He fell when his scaffold gave way and his safety line was severed by a bridge girder as he fell.

A San Francisco coroner's jury, however, ruled that Patrick's death was accidental — but urged bridge officials to make sure their safety regulations were being followed.

Two painters were injured seriously in 1965 and 1961, and painters union officials also blamed both of those accidents on bad equipment.

Del Carlo, raising the issue before the full board, won prompt agreement to have the district's entire safety program checked by the building and operating committee, which he chairs. He said that some of the district's safety equipment may be found to be obsolete.

The district's attorney, Thomas M. Jenkings, objected to "any implication" that safety standards were not being met, and Gen. Mgr. Dale W. Luehring said there "never has been a dollar compromise" on safety.

Del Carlo, clearly implying that canvass gloves give a better grip than rubber gloves, said the difference in price between them was "peanuts."

The district's senior projects engineer, Glen A. Wallis, told newsmen that "we don't know why he fell, but if he had had his safety belt fastened, he would have stood a better chance of surviving." He said it still was unknown whether Caton slipped or possibly "passed out."

District officials and the painters union still were investigating, Wallis said.

They are worn to keep painters' hands dry when washing down sandblasted steel, and when sandblasting to protest their skin.

Terminal Plan For Sausalito Supported

A master plan envisioning two Sausalito ferry terminals and parking facilities costing up to $5.7 million was endorsed unanimously but "tentatively" yesterday by Golden Gate Bridge District directors.

Several directors objected that almost half of the cost would be for parking facilities that the city should build, not the district. Some also questioned whether the terminals still would not be too costly for the district.

The unanimous vote, however, was on the basis that the endorsement only was to get the plan before Sausalito city officials for their comment.

San Rafael Mayor C. Paul Bettini, who led objections to the plan, also questioned whether the city would be willing to sell the district the anticipated downtown waterfront terminal site. He cited the terminals as "a luxury program rather than being practical."

Bettini also challenged the necessity of a second terminal in northern Sausalito and the propriety of joining with private property owners in commercial development of the Marinship area.

The plan, reported in detail in Wednesday's Independent-Journal, was drawn by Environmental Planning and Design Associates of Sausalito. The downtown terminal would displace both the Sausalito Yacht Club and the old ferry Berkeley with new fill covering about 14,000 square feet.

Golden Gate Bridge District Board Also:

CHILDREN — Cut children's bus fares between Marin or Sonoma and San Francisco to 25 cents for ages 6 through 12 as of June 1, and eliminated fares for children under 6 on the Sausalito ferry.

GROOVY — Received a report from Dist. Engineer Robert E. Shields that he soon will recommend cutting grooves into the road deck of the bridge to improve skid resistance.

LARKSPUR — Granted a $134,940 contract to the San Francisco architectural and planning firm of Braccia-Debrer-Heglund to do the first phase of a master plan for the Larkspur ferry terminal.

EASTSHORE — Authorized the district's attorney, Thomas M. Jenkins, to "make an offer" to Eastshore Lines to extend to the firm district subsidies for charter bus service to areas of San Francisco not served by the district's bus fleet. The bus company, which has been operating charter service between Marin and downtown San Francisco, complained of unfair competition. The authorization was granted after a 25-minute closed-door session called by Jenkins to discuss "potential litigation" against the district by Eastshore.

FORK LIFT — Bought a fork lift truck from Elder and Co. of Hayward for $8,794, and a front end loader from Contractors Machinery Co. of San Jose for $8,894.

Injuries Minor In Auto Crash

A 25-year-old Merced man suffered minor injuries last night when he drove into a signal light in Greenbrae reportedly to avoid a car that swerved in front of him.

Donald J. Brandt told the California Highway Patrol that the car cut him off on eastbound Sir Francis Drake Boulevard at the Bon Air Shopping Center.

Brandt said he would see his own physician. The accident was at 10:10 p.m.

Heroin Sale Brings Time Behind Bars

A 27-year-old Sausalito woman, who claimed she was only flirting with heroin, was sentenced in Marin Superior Court Thursday to six months in jail for selling $30 of the drug to a narcotics agent last year.

Judge Samuel W. Gardiner also placed Felicia Mary Fouche on three years probation, but delayed execution of the sentence until an appeal. Her attorney filed the appeal after sentencing.

Gardiner had found her guilty last month of the sale Sept. 28 on a houseboat at Gate 5, Sausalito. Attorneys had submitted the case for Gardiner's decision on the basis of evidence heard at a preliminary hearing in municipal court.

She told a probation officer it was the first time she had sold heroin and claimed she shunned the drug scene following her arrest. The woman has a previous record of drug arrests.

Teacher's Plea To Drop Counts Rejected

A Marin Superior Court judge yesterday rejected an effort by the attorney for Kenneth A. Anderson, suspended Tamalpais High School teacher, to have the charges dismissed.

Attorney Carl B. Shapiro argued that the allegations against Anderson were not specific enough and that state law had altered procedures for firing teachers. The Tamalpais High School District hasn't followed those new procedures, which include a full hearing before the board, Shapiro said.

However, Judge E. Warren McGuire overruling Shapiro's request, said the charges were specific enough and added that the new state law governing teacher evaluation and hiring and firing did not go into effect until after the present legislature adjourns.

Anderson, a tenured English teacher, was suspended last week when a charge of immoral conduct was added to two original allegations against him.

They are unfitness for service and persistent violation of and/or refusal to obey school rules.

Specifically, the charges include "encouraging, condoning and participating in illegal acts by student Bruce (Paul) Lohmann," a one-time student of Anderson who confessed last April to three bombings in Southern Marin, including one at the school.

Anderson, a 31-year-old former professional baseball player, was removed from teaching duties last May, but worked as an assistant to the school principal until his suspension.

Since he is tenured, he cannot be fired until a superior court judge rules that the charges justify it. Depositions were to be taken today preparatory to the required court proceeding.

Petaluma Youth Is Pot Suspect

An 18-year-old Petaluma youth was arrested Thursday night on suspicion of possessing marijuana and drug paraphernalia after he was stopped for slamming on his brakes loudly in the parking lot of a Larkspur market.

James Reed Aggas of 74 Sprauer Road was booked into Marin County Jail where he posted $500 bail. He is to appear in Marin Municipal Court Monday.

Police said that after he was stopped, an officer noticed cigarette papers in his shirt pocket. There also turned out to be a plastic bag of green vegetable matter in the pocket, police said.

Cyclist Hurt In Collision

Robert Fred Wunder of 1301 Second Street suffered a sprained right ankle in the 9 p.m. accident, the hospital reported.

The car was driven by Frank T. Garvin, 25, of 125 North San Pedro Road, San Rafael.

Ship Models Recall The Past History Of The Sea Voyagers

said. "They're usually a labor of love."

He prizes the Bradbury models because of their detail. He owns replicas of the Golden Hind, 1577, and Revenge, both ships commanded by Sir Francis Drake, the Mayflower, 1620, and the U.S.S. Constitution, 1812.

The ships are as exact as it is possible to make them. "I'm sure he (Bradbury) got the plans from the British admiralty," said Choklat.

"You know it's exact when a model builder goes into showing people with details on their cuffs and collars," he said.

Bradbury's model of the Mayflower, for example, has figures of the crew standing on deck. One man is holding a copy of a sea chart in his hands, and a plan of the then-known world is clearly visible.

Pilgrim costumes, complete with cuffs, collars and boots, adorn the sailors.

Detail on the ships is equally exact. Coats-of-arms on shields are lashed to the gunwales of the Revenge to signify which knights are on board.

The painted designs on Drake's ship the Golden Hind are faithfully reproduced. The Constitution's copper bottom is there, and rigging is as precise on the model as captains on the actual vessels kept it.

Deck seams are evident, as are windlasses and other deck hardware.

Choklat said he believes Bradbury first formed the hulls, probably from a block of pine, then built upon them. He said he does not know what scale the models are constructed to.

He classes himself as an amateur collector and said he got started on the hobby while searching for some sort of ship model to put in the entranceway to a yacht club to which he belongs.

Choklat, 46, is a Pan American airline executive, and travels extensively. He said he kept watching for models which were worth acquiring, but found it a tough search. In London, he said, where one would expect to find many, he has found only Bradbury's models.

The shopkeepers at Hummel have provided him only with a brief clipping from the Times of London showing a picture of the old man, holding one of his models. "They told us that his health was very poor," said Choklat. He is supposedly in his late 80s and began his model-building late in life.

Attempts by Choklat's wife, Mary, to trace Bradbury through the Times of London story have failed, she sad.

After a recent move to his Sausalito-based yacht from Palo Alto, Choklat has found a difficulty. "They (the models) just won't fit in with our way of life," he said.

He wants to sell them. "You can't even go to sea with them," he explained.

He prefers that they be sold to some type of institution where they can be seen and appreciated by more persons than just their owner.

"Models are worth what a collector wants to pay for them," he said. He estimated that these are worth a minimum of $1,000 apiece.

He can be reached through P.O. Box 551, Sausalito.

Agenda Includes Hub Apartments

The San Anselmo Planning Commission will consider a request by Marius Cordone that would allow an additional 10 apartment units on his property when the commission meets Monday at 8 p.m. at city hall.

Cordone is requesting to rezone 45 feet of his property at 1310-1340 Sir Francis Drake Boulevard to R-3 (multiple-apartment). The added footage would allow him to build 41 apartment units on the property instead of the 31 as currently planned, according to John O'Rourke of the planning staff.

The 45 feet is currently zoned R-1 (residential single-family), O'Rourke said.

Girl, 16, Is Director Of Campaign

Mary Connor Limont, a junior at Marin Catholic High School, acknowledged this will be her first political campaign, but predicted that electing French to Congress would be only a prelude to getting him elected President.

She said that Marin campaign headquarters will open Monday in the Frank Howard Allen real estate office in Greenbrae at 505 Sir Francis Drake Boulevard. She and other volunteers will man staff the office from 3 to 5 p.m. weekdays, she said.

French, a 25-uear-old Army veteran, is competing for the nomination with San Francisco Superivsor Roger Boas. The district, which includes all of Marin and portions of San Francisco, is represented by Republican William S. Mailliard of San Francisco. He is unopposed for the Republican nomination.

Solano County Girl Hurt In Accident

Kim Tomlinson, 17 of Dixon, Solano County, was treated at Hillcrest Hospital Thursday for right knee cuts suffered in a two-car accident at 3:55 p.m. on Valley Ford Road near Roblar Road, west of Petaluma.

The California Highway Patrol said she was a passenger in a car driven by William C. Clause III, 17, of Dixon, which collided with a car driven by Robert T. Martin, 17, of 1433 Joan Drive, Petaluma.

Larkspur Council Has Busy Agenda

Larkspur City Council will meet twice next week, Monday night to continue the hearing on grading Little King Mountain, and Wednesday night when it may name a new planning commissioner.

The Monday night meeting will begin at 8 p.m. in the all-purpose room of the Henry C. Hall School. It will be the second session on the appeal by the Adolph A. Tiscornia estate of the city planning commission's denial of a grading permit for the mountain. Mayor William G. Fleckles closed the last hearing, April 18, before those opposed to the grading had a chance to speak.

The council will conduct a regular business meeting Wednesday beginning at 8 p.m. in the city council chambers. City Manager Kent B. Bathurst said a new planning board member may be named.

Ad Hoc Committee Is Formed In Sleepy Hollow

A 40-member ad hoc committee has been formed by the Sleepy Hollow Homes Association to "take a look at the whole spectrum of community problems," according to association president Beau W. Chapman.

The committee was formed as a follow-up to the association's March 30 meeting when 250 homeowners met with a group of law enforcement representatives to discuss community concerns, Chapman said.

"But," he added, "we want to look into a lot of things, from upgrading youth activities to how to deal with repeat juvenile offenders."

The ad hoc committee will meet on its own for the next several weeks and is expected to report findings at a future meeting of the homes association, Chapman said.

The association also at its Thursday night meeting approved a $20,000 budget for 1972-73. Most income is expected to come from $40-a-year membership dues, Chapman said. The group has a membership of 320.

Key items in the budget are clubhouse pool maintenance, lifeguard salary, clubhouse nursery school operations, and donations to Pop Warner and Little League baseball, Chapman said.

MOBILE HOMES

The Plush Dwelling Sites

By MONTY HOYT
The Christian Science Monitor
News Service

(Last of three articles)

ELGIN, Ill. — "If anybody had told me two years ago that I'd be living in a mobile home today, I would have told them they were crazy," declares John Krohn, a retired electrician from Chicago.

Almost as a dare, he and his wife responeded to an ad about a mobile-home park: "I just didn't believe it could be as good as it said it said it was," he recalls, taking a short break from the pool table in a plush, $340,000 recreation center where he spends many hours in his newly adopted retirement community.

But it was not just any trailer park that made him change his mind. Willow Lake Estates, a planned, adult community beside the Fox River here west of Chicago, is one of 269 such superior-rated mobile home parks with landscaped lawns, heated swimming pools, and extensive recreational facilities that are beginning to spring up in the American countryside.

Despite the continuing development and upgrading of mobile home parks, the supply can hardly keep astride of demand, particularly in major metropolitan areas in the North. This leads to a restrictive market in many cases, where mobile-home owners are at the mercy of their landlords: Rents can be raised, eviction threats bandied about, and excessive entrance or moving fees charged.

"Parks are closed in many states unless the party buys their mobile home from the park operator," charges Mrs. Marge Dixon, secretary of the Michigan Mobile Home Owners Association.

"Once they've bought it, they're stuck with it," she maintains, noting that owners are forced to take their homes with them when they move, which can be prohibitively expensive even if they can find a new park, or else pay an exorbitant fee to leave the unit behind.

Since entrance fees to most parks can run into hundreds of dollars, "the mobile-home owner doesn't have a chance," she contends, paying whether they come, or go, or move their home.

This problem is compounded by the fact that not enough land is being zoned for mobile home parks — "and what is available is usually ghetto zoning," asserts Mrs. Jane Conrad, consumer director of the American Mobile Home Association, an owners group in Denver. She cautions prospective buyers to make sure they have a guaranteed space to put their home before they buy.

Howard Seyller, sales manager for the Willow Lake Estates in Elgin, says that it took a two-year battle with the zoning board and the planning commission before promoters got the city council to approve the park. That was eight years ago.

"Today everybody knows it's an asset to the community," he proudly announces.

The park, which pays the normal real estate tax, also paid to have its sewerage system and utilities put in, and paved its own streets. Residents of the park also pay a personal property tax on their mobile homes. Most of these tax monies go to support the local school system. Yet none of the 600 families has any school-aged child to add to the crowded schools.

"We've brought a good clientele to this area," Seyller declares about the semi-retirement park, which boasts five millionaires and has its own social director. "Still, if somebody came in here with a proposal for another park and guaranteed that it would be as good as ours, I'm certain the council would vote against it."

It is estimated that 40 per cent of the three million mobile homes in this country are located in parks (the majority are still situated on privately owned plots in rural areas). The Woodall Publishing Co., which puts out the mobile-home-park directory each year, rates 12,381 of the estimated 22,000 parks in this country in its 1972 edition.

Among these more up-to-date, rated parks there are more than one million spaces fo mobile homes, yet the parks average only a 5 per cent vacancy rate.

"Many of the new parks are spoken for before they've even started construction," says Curtis Fuller, president of Woodall Publishing.

"We've been rating mobile-home parks for 25 years. There is a continual up-grading of our standard, and parks are dropped from our directory because they don't meet our improving standard. Nothing has done more to obsolete some parks than the changes in the mobile-home models themselves," he declares.

The prejudices against mobile homes are breaking down increasingly, he maintains, as better parks are being built. "But it's a longtime proposition."

In the long run, the mobile home is likely to find even greater acceptance among those segments of the population with whom it already scores heavily — young and retired couples — and it may well develop popularity among two potential markets — minority families and second-home buyers.

But experts see this continuing boom prefaced by suitable protection for home-owners through stricter regulation and legislation and — perhaps most important — opening up adequate zoning.

INSIDE RUSSIA

The Seeds Of Discontent

By CHARLOTTE SAIKOWSKI
The Christian Science Monitor
News Service

"On the Russian sea, with its recent public agitation, a calm is about to descend. The flood tide of the leap year (1968), with its storms and tragedies, is being succeeded in the present leap year by an ebb tide, which brings with it apathy, exhaustion, and the need for rethinking."

MOSCOW — A tense uncertainty hangs over the Soviet protest movement. The mood is reflected in the above words from a recent letter to the Times of London by five Soviet dissenters expressing anxiety over the plight of their nation's dissident intellectuals.

The letter warns that a new campaign is being fueled against banned writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn, that nuclear physicist Andrie D. Sakharov, the civil-rights champion, is "no longer permitted graciously to attend court cases," that many intellectuals have been interrogated, and that an ill fate awaits Pyotr Yakir, the 49-year-old historian regarded as leader of the dissident community.

It notes, too, that such prominent dissenters as writers Andrie Sinyavsky and Yuli Daniel and poetess Natalya Gorbanvskaya are coming out of labor camps now. But while these and others are being returned to society, the authorities are attacking other "sources of likely trouble."

How far the regime's current assault on dissent will go remains to be seen. But it is causing deep reflection in dissident circles and again focuses attention on their bold struggle for human rights.

For the outside world this struggle is a subject for unending fascination. Hardly a day goes by but the Western press reports some event in the movement, be it the trial of a Moscow dissident, the arrest of a Ukrainian intellectual, or an appeal of the unofficial Human Rights Committee.

So much attention is in fact paid to the topic that the impression is sometimes conveyed that the Soviet Union is seething with political discontent. Nothing could be more misleading.

The plain truth is that the great mass of Russians hear of dissident activities, if at all, only from Western broadcasts. And the political influence of the dissenters is negligible.

Indeed, there was far more effective political dissent in prerevolutionary Czarist Russia than there is in the totalitarian Soviet state.

Yet the very fact that dissent exists in so highly controlled a society —and it has developed largely since the Khrushchev era —gives it a significance beyond its present small strength.

Kremlin authority is not challenged by the protest movement. But it is bothered by it, and it could well be a fear of its potential damage, as well as the growing irritation over it, that is behind the determination to move more forcefully against it.

What, exactly, is the "democratic movement"?

The term itself is misleading, for it implies an organized political opposition. That does not exist.

The "movement" is an amorphous agglomeration of individuals (mostly writers, scientists, and other members of the intelligentsia), tiny political circles, and small national minorities and religioss groups that have been persecuted by the regime and that seek a restitution of grievances or, in a broader sense, greater individual freedom and the administration of justice under Soviet law.

They circulate clandestine periodicals, sign letters and petitions, and occasionally stage a brief public demonstration. But their activities are uncoordinated, their objectives often differ, and their members can even be at loggerheads as to means and methods of protest.

How many people are involved in or touched by the movement is impossible to know (and this discussion excludes Soviet Jews seeking to emigrate to Israel).

One dissident spokesman estimates that the activists — those individuals who, for the sake of civil rights, are willing to risk their jobs and face terms in labor camps or psychiatric hospitals — number perhaps 200 or so. Many of these, like the writer Vladimir I. Bukovsky, now are imprisoned.

Another 1,000 or 1,500, the spokesman believes, help out in some way, although they do not "put themselves on the line." Still another 5,000 may be "sympathetic."

One evening a group of dissidents gathered at the home of Valery Chalidze, a co-founder of the Human Rights Committee, to celebrate the Georgian physicist's birthday. For the occasion, a table in the middle of the one-room apartment was laden with platefuls of cheese and fish sandwiches.

As the dissidents mingled with the few Western journalists present, several carloads of KGB (secret police) sat waiting and watching outside the apartment building. The atmosphere bristled with that unpleasant tension that always surrounds such encounters.

In quiet conversation one quickly learned that these dissenters have no hope of changing the Soviet system; they know that, given the country's centuries-old tradition of authoritarianism, liberalization of the regime will take place only slowly.

But they see themselves as spearheading the struggle for liberal reform.

What may not always be realized abroad is the large role played by the western press in keeping the dissidents' cause alive. Protesters have no legal means through which to report abuses of the law. They rely on Moscow based journalists to make these known abroad and thus indirectly to Soviet radio listeners.

Apart from the rare —and quickly dispersed —public street demonstration by a handful of dissidents and their supporters, there is no overt political action. (The sit-ins last year by Soviet Jews were an exception.)

At one time it was the practice for dissident intellectuals to send their signed protests or appeals to such persons of authority as Premier Alexei N. Kosygin, President Nikolai V. Podgorny, or the U.S.S.R. prosecutor-general, or to the United Nations.

But it was seldom known whether such communications ever reached their destination.

In the more recent past, the tactic has been to address "open" protests and to circulate copies to Western journalists for transmission abroad.

Such appeals might concern, for instance, a political trial that denied an individual due process, conditions in a labor camp, or the use of drugs to force political prisoners to change their beliefs.

One of the most significant developments in the protest movement has been the Human Rights Committee, an organization founded daringly more than a year ago by academician Sakharov and two other Moscow scientists.

Dedicated to the study of human rights problems and to "advising" the regime on the subject, the committee is not officially recognized. And it has only four full members.

But, insisting on operating openly, it has communicated with the International League for the Rights of Man in New York and other world groups and has acquired considerable symbolic value if no real authority.

That Soviet authorities have so far found it awkward to put down the Human Rights Committee is undoubtedly due to its distinguished membership. They have interrogated its members and confiscated some of its documents. But why they have not suppressed the operations of the small band of lesser known dissidents has been harder to explain.

Until now, the KGB has acted with relative restraint, largely, it is thought, because certain party leaders have been unwilling to give it a free hand.

Dissidents themselves suggest that the regime has not wanted to create an atmosphere of fear in the country by a return to mass arrests, that it is more sensitive to world opinion these days, and that it can keep better track of political "misfits" by allowing them a measure of freedom.

However, the active protest movement now appears to face a severe challenge. Since the beginning of the year there has been a visible crackdown on dissent, as epidenced in the severe prison sentence meted out to Vladimir Bukovsky, arrests in the Ukraine, and raids on the homes of Moscow and Leningrad dissidents.

Among the apartments thoroughly searched was that of Yakir. So far, this active civil rights campaigner, a man with a thick graying beard who spent many years in prison camps under Stalin, has been spared KGB repression, presumably because of his family connections. (His father was a respected military commander shot during the Stalin purges.) But he is currently under heavy surveillance.

Another straw in the wind is the regime's reported decision to suppress the Chronicle of Current Events, an extraordinary underground newssheet that has been published clandestinely every two months since the spring of 1968.

It now is believed the regime is trying to silence the hard-core protesters either by jailing them or inducing them to emigrate.

Meanwhile, to what extent Soviet citizens morally support the nonconformists in their society is a relevant but difficult question to answer. The broad masses, certainly, are politically apathetic and even resent any disturbance of a rebellious nature.

But there is a growing body of well-educated, sophisticated intellectuals who would welcome democratization of the system.

These are people who, although they would never risk their careers to defy the authorities, listen avidly to foreign broadcasts, read typewritten manuscripts of Solzhenitsyn's works, and silently cheer when an eminent figure like Dr. Sakharov or cellist Mstislav Rostropovich boldly speaks out against an injustice.

"How important are people like Vladimir Bukovsky?" I asked a university scholar.

The Russian, who has not so much as seen a copy of the underground Chronicle, was thoughtful.

"Extremely important," he replied, "They won't change things here, but they do add to that overall pressure on the government that will gradually force it to become more liberal."

Carrying Tips For Safety Sake

There comes a time in every do-it-yourselfer's life when he finds it necessary to transport lumber or the like in his passenger vehicle in order to get home to finish his project.

The following is offered in order that it may be done safely and legally. Section 35111 of the California Vehicle Code states, "no passenger vehicle shall be operated on any highway with any load carried thereon extending beyond the line of the fenders on the left side or more than six inches beyond the line of the fenders on its right side". When you are considering putting that piece of lumber in such a position that it hangs out the window remember this article.

For those that prefer to put the projecting items in the trunk of a car, the back of a stationwagon, or in the back of a truck section 24604 of the California Vehicle Code reads as follows: "Whenever the load upon any vehicle extends, or whenever any integral part of any vehicle projects, to the rear four feet or more beyond the bed or body of the vehicle, there shall be displayed at the extreme end of the load a red flag or cloth not less than 16 inches square.

During the hours of darkness or when visibility is reduced two red lights of an approved type must be mounted in place of the red flag or cloth.

Section 35410 of the California Vehicle code advises that "the load upon any motor vehicle shall not extend to the rear beyond the last point of support for a greater distance than that equal to two-thirds of the length of the wheel base of the vehicle carrying such load.

Industrial Safety Chief Reports Action In Court

SACRAMENTO (UPI)—A legislative fact-finding committee was told yesterday that the state Division of Industrial Safety, under fire for assertedly being soft on employers, has sought eight prosecutions of contractors in the last 60 days.

This contrasted with six requests for prosecutions of employers for allegedly violating safety orders during 1970, during which 230,000 written violations were issued by the division.

The embattled division's newly appointed acting chief, Roy J. Bell, announced the beefed up requests for court action at a hearing of the Assembly Select Committee on Industrial Safety.

"Since the last meeting of this committee 60 days ago, we have initiated eight prosecutions," Bell testified. "Not all will be brought to a successful prosecution because that depends on the city attorney or the district attorney. But we have requested eight prosecutions."

The committee was appointed by Assembly Speaker Bob Moretti, D-Van Nuys, to investigate charges that the division was "employer-oriented" and top-level officials tended to look the other way when violations of safety orders were issued by field engineers.

The charges arose in the wake of the Sylmar Tunnel disaster last June 24 in which 17 workmen were killed.

Bell detailed for the committee actions he is taking to reorganize the division to make it more effective. He was appointed acting chief by Gov. Ronald Reagan when Jack Hatton abruptly resigned under committee and labor fire.

Among other things, Bell said, 31 new employes have been hired in the last two months, including 20 engineers, one attorney, a senior investigator, a graphic artist and eight clerks.

"I think you are doing a tremendous job of implementing," chairman Jack Fenton, D-Montebello, told Bell.

Fenton has been one of the division's most outspoken critics and has demanded the resignation of Bell's immediate superior, state Industrial Relations Director William Hern.

"We intend to see that the program works," Hern told Fenton.

"So do we, Mr. Hern," Fenton replied.

Bell said he has been told by high level Reagan administration officials that he will not be named permanent chief of the division. He currently is also the permanent administrative director of the state Division of Industrial Accidents.

Models Teach Mother, Child

By KENT GARLAND BURTT
The Christian Science Monitor News Service

The Mother-Child Home Program, operating here and in Glen Cove, sends toy demonstrators into the homes of young mothers twice a week to show them how to read or "picture-read" a book and how to play with a child over a new toy in the way most beneficial to the child's intellect. The demonstrators use a range of techniques which they encourage the mother to adopt when she takes over the play session.

The program is designed by Dr. Phyllis Levenstein, sponsored by the Family Service Association of Nassau County, and directed toward families in the low-income bracket.

DURING THE first home session with a lively 2-year-old girl named Gloria, the toy demonstrator told her mother, "Gloria spent most of the time racing around the room. But later in the year a film (prepared for trainees) shows Gloria scrambling eagerly up onto the counch between the toy demonstrator and her mother. When the demonstrator hands her a book Gloria says happily, "That's my book!" Which it is. Carefully chosen toys and books are given to the families because their presence in the home continues to promote the interchange of conversation between mother and children.

At the half-hour session Gloria's mother and the demonstrator take turns reading "Are You My Mother?" But the book is not just read through. At every page one of the adults pauses to ask Gloria a question, get her to point to something, or relate the picture to an event or object in her own experience. Her mother has obviously profited from the sessions because she and Gloria talk their way through the book.

When asked what came out of the egg, Gloria answers, "Cake." Without deprecating her mother simply corrects, "A bird."

TESTING DISCLOSED that this child made a gain of 25 points in her IQ. Dr. Levenstein's view is plain. "It does not take a college or a high school degree to know how to talk profitably to a child of 2 or 3. It has been said that talking itself is the 'original word game.' Scientific research has indicated that success in school is attributed in part to plenty of verbal interaction between parent and child in early childhood."

Dr. Levenstein reasons that enrichment of the disadvantaged "must contain a conspicuous language thrust and would be most effective at the period of early speech development."

She explains, "Intellect is based on the building of concepts. Ideas or concepts are fostered through language. Words fix images. If chilren from low-income homes are to move ahead in the world they must first have enough preschool cognitive enrichment to be able to utilize the equal educational opportunities available to them."

In the first year of the project children tested gained an average of 17 IQ points. Then nonprofessionals were assigned to be toy demonstrators. The gain was not as great in one year, but when the nonprofessionals continued with their children a second year it was found the children made the same average gain. So it was turned into a two-year program using volunteers and paid aides who are not professionals.

The first small participants now are in second grade, achieving at grade level and getting good behavior marks. The success of the program can be measured in other ways. Almost all the mothers stay in the program, which is completely voluntary, all the way through the year, rarely missing teir prearranged dates with the toy demonstrator. Satisfied mothers have spread the word and now there is a long waiting list of applicants, unlike the first year when a large proportion of families turned down the idea.

"We wanted to see if it would work," she said. "It did work, dramatically. Now we forget how radical then was the idea that IQs could be changed through learning experiences. It was important to add to the evidence."

The value of this unusual program is that instead of taking the child out of the home and thus perhaps making the mother feel inadequate, it strengthens the mother's effectiveness and dignity. She is considered her child's main teacher. Dr. Levenstein believes that "cognitive enrichment should be embedded in the child's relationships with beloved family figures, especially the mother." With the mother as the prime focus, the child's advancement later on in school will probably be reinforced by the wiser mother at home.

In a study made for the U.S. Office of Education last year by the American Institutes for Research, Dr. Levenstein's program was one of only 10 projects out of 326 "compensatory educational programs" across the nation labeled "successful." This spring the federal government will circulate in all school districts a description of the Mother-Child Home Program.

Eight other agencies are already using the program. They are family counseling agencies in Paterson, N.J., Newton, Mass., Norristown, Pa., Norwalk and Danbury, Conn., and Utica, N.Y. The Bureau of Indian Affairs has three tribes participating. Public school districts in rural Conway Springs, Kan., and industrial Pittsfield, Mass., are also using the program. Dr. Levenstein's office offers training, site visits, and follow-up consultation.

Dr. Levenstein beams when she talks about her work. "It's exciting and satisfying because it's a combination of everything I ever did," she says. She was first a teacher, then a social worker, then a clinical psychologist. She is also a mother. She got her doctorate in an interdisciplinary study of the family.

The only cloud on her professional horizon seems to be the question of what will happen when federal funds from the National Institute of Mental Health terminate in 1973. Demand for dissemination will grow as news of this successful program spreads, and dissemination is costly.

Clinically speaking, nurse your career along.

There are a lot of inducements to furthering your civilian career at the 6253d U.S. Army Hospital. At the present time, the Medical Reserve has a critical need for nurses (especially those coming off active duty), clinical specialists, operating room specialists, dental specialists, and a host of nonmedical enlisted specialties.

For nurses with a 3-year diploma who want to complete that vital last year of college, the Army Reserve is a great way to earn college money: as much as a fifth week's pay a month for one weekend meeting; optional active duty for school and short refresher courses with full pay and tax-free allowances; and one annual training period yearly, usually at a major Army Hospital.

For enlisted medical specialties, both prior-service personnel and new enlistees can take advantage of the Army Reserve's intensive training program. If you take clinical specialist training, after completion you qualify to take the licensed vocational nurse (LVN) exam. LVN's are in great demand... in many hospitals, LVN starting pay is $600-$700 monthly. Army Reserve training in the other medical specialties will similarly boost the demand for your skills in civilian life.

Why not take a very clinical look at what the Army Reserve can do for you? If you'd like to be healthier, wealthier, and wiser. The Army Reserve.

GENERATION RAP

by Helen and Sue Bottel

Helen Cannot Tell A Lie, Read Her Married Daughter's Letter

DEAR RAP:

I beg to differ with Helen's answer to "Justified Liar," who kept her small children from a dangerous river with tales of a big bad wolf down there.

You asked, Helen, "How many times later on did the kids privately question the mother's truthfulness?"

I grew up with a "troll" who lived at the edge of a big dam and kept all the little kids away. That fear was a delicious mixture of fairy tale and just enough belief to control our flirtation with danger. Like Santa Clause, the "terrible troll" didn't build distrust of our parents. We played their game — and it was much better than the spankings we might have got — or maybe a funeral with us as star performers.

That psychology stuff sounds great, but Mama Helen, can you truthfully say you never told a little white lie to protect your kids from harm? — UN-DROWNED AND UN-PSYCHED

DEAR UN AND UN:

I cannot tell a lie. Read on: — HELEN

DEAR HELEN:

I was rather surprised at your answer to the mother who told her children fibs to keep them from drowning.

When my family lived in woodsy, remote southern Oregon, I too was warned of the "bad beasties" who lurked on the river's edge, waiting to eat up little girls who romed alone. I too was mightily "alarmed" at the "legend of Big Bear" — he caught little girls wandering away from home and sat on them!

You know, every time my brothers took me to the river (with parental okay), I kept them a little ahead of me to "tell the beasties I'm not alone!" And when I did venture waterward (a kid must test even if she only braves fifty steps on the river path) I went well armed — with my mother's police whistle, my brother's cap pistol, a big stick, pockets full of stones —and my nurse's kit. Just in case.

As far as I can see, the only harm all this has done is to instill in me a holy respect for big bears. And what's to regret about that?

You see, I was the "victim" of parents who loved me enough to keep me from harm, and I believe they did a fantastic job of raising me, my two older brothers, and my little sister, Sue. I plan to raise my own family likewise, tempering discipline with fun, a bit of fantasy and a lot of love!

So, think back on the olden days, (Ah, how soon we forget our "follies") — for there is no reason to regret telling such "altruistic lies." They never hurt us, and we've never thought you wrong. — thank you, mother — Your loving (married) daughter, KATHY.

DEAR KAT:

My cup runneth over! Thank you, daughter dear, for I always felt a spot of guilt about "Sitting Bear," — Your loving mother, HELEN

DEAR HELEN AND SUE:

It might seem like a small problem, but it's terrible to me. My ears stick out. I mean they really flap! I try to wear my hair so they won't show, but it's impossible. I'm mocked and called "Dumbo." Help! — E.A.R.

DEAR E.:

Surgery can solve your problem. And it's well worth the price if it saves a lifetime of embarrassment. We hope your parents agree! — HELEN AND SUE

(Got a problem? Or a subject for discussion, two-generation style? Direct your questions to either Sue or Helen Bottel —or both, in care of the Independent-Journal, if you want a combination mother-daughter answer.)

The Chemise Is Making Comeback

It is new, sensuous and sexy, according to fashion designer Luba, who has many chemise dresses in soft sweater knits for the fall collection she opens informally next week.

Luba said she prefers the chemise as a casual shirt, clinging at the hips and tapering slightly at the hem.

Rudi Gernreich Fashion Story

The Rudi Gernreich fashion story starts in Vienna where Rudi, as a child, became familiar with his aunt's salon de couture. Even at a tender age he knew they were the kinds of clothes he did not want to make. He came to America in 1938 and became an American citizen five years later, when he was 21. He likes to do uncomplicated clothes— the most uncomplicated of all being the topless bathing suit.

Fold Line Should Be Removed Before Cutting

By EUNICE FARMER
(Register and Tribune Syndicate)

DEAR EUNICE,

Once again I am faced with the problem of a permanent crease in summer fabrics. Naturally, the ugly crease always appears at the center front of my dresses. What can be done to remove it?

MRS. S. S.

DEAR MRS. S.S.,

The fold line in fabrics continues to annoy retailers as well as customers. One expert opinion that works most of the time, in fact if it doesn't, there is probably no solution, is the following. Incidentally, the crease has no relation to the age of the fabric, but instead, with the finish.

Permanent press fabrics are the worst offenders. Always test your experiments on the end of the fabric in case it doesn't work. The crease must always be removed before the garment is cut because if it can't be removed, you will have to re-fold the fabric and create a new fold line which avoids the original fold.

Try mixing an equal amount of water and white distilled vinegar. Soak and squeeze out a man's handkerchief or any lightweight underlining fabric. Use this as a press cloth over the line and press with a fairly warm iron, not hot. Pressing should be done on the wrong side of the fabric. Any vinegar odor will disappear after fabric dries.

We must always remember that with each new miracle in fabrics, we must face a few liabilities. Permanent press and no iron fabrics are much more difficult to change once a crease has been folded or pressed.

DEAR EUNICE,

In a recent column you mented a "caftan" which could be made by following simple instructions. I guess I'm not very sophisticated because I have no idea what you are talking about and what a caftan looks like. I am very intrigued by the whole thing and would like more information.

MRS. N.D.

DEAR MRS. N.D.,

Technically, a caftan refers to a long, flowing tunic that originated in Turkey and Egypt.

I think it is marvelous as a cover up for a bathing suit as well as a glamorous lounging outfit.

My directions are very simple to follow. A Caftan is perfect for beach or bedroom, easy to pack, and once you make one, you'll never want to be without one. You may receive our easy-to-make instructions for the "Super-Caftan" by sending a long- self-addressed, stamped envelope plus 25 cents to Eunice Farmer in care of this paper with your request. It is a "must" for the season coming up, and it also makes a great gift.

Would you believe, I saw one made in terry cloth with heavy braid trims in the men's department in New York at a cost of well over $50? So you see, they can be appropriate for everyone in your family, male or female, regardless of age.

TAILOR TRIX WINNER

"Along with most of my friends, I always had difficulty getting the neck edges to come out even when sewing on the back neck facing, until I discovered the following solution. First, apply the zipper (if one is used) and then machine stitch across the center back a distance of about one inch each side of the center back exactly on the 5/8 inch seamline. After sewing this guideline, clip the center back apart. Use this machine-stitched line as a guide in sewing on the back facings and they will come out even every time. This method also works perfectly when stitching the waistband on to skirts or slacks."

DEAR EUNICE, Do you believe in taping seams of knitting garments to prevent stretching?

MRS. N.R.

DEAR MRS. N.R.,

There is a difference of opinion. I have found that by inserting tape in seams, the seamline often becomes too rigid and actually loses it's flexibility that is compatible with the way knits should look.

At a recent seminar I attended, it was suggested that before stitching the shoulder seams together (the most important area to keep in shape), you pull out the bobbin and top thread together, the length of the shoulder seam.

Next, place the seam to be stitched in your machine, place these two threads directly over the seamline, and machine stitch over them with a small zig-zag or stretch stitch. This will give you the lightest weight "stay" for your seam that is possible, and you won't lose any of the flexibility of the knit.

Girl Scouts Staging A Weekend Camp-Out

The girls set up camp, some with tents, yesterday afternoon and held opening ceremonies at 4 p.m. Today there were crafts and activity sessions set for morning and afternoon, including tye-dyeing, macrame, games, folk dancing, and guitar lessons and playing.

A song fest will follow and a camp fire will be held tonight. The Scouts will do their own cooking throughout the camp session, said Mrs. Raymond Mann of San Rafael, camp director.

Program coordinators are Linda Anderson of Novato and Mrs. Edward Fernandez of Lucas Valley. Other committee members include Mmes. Kenneth Brown, William Rose and Frank Klakowski, who is camp nurse.

Much of the planning has been done by the Girl Scouts themselves.

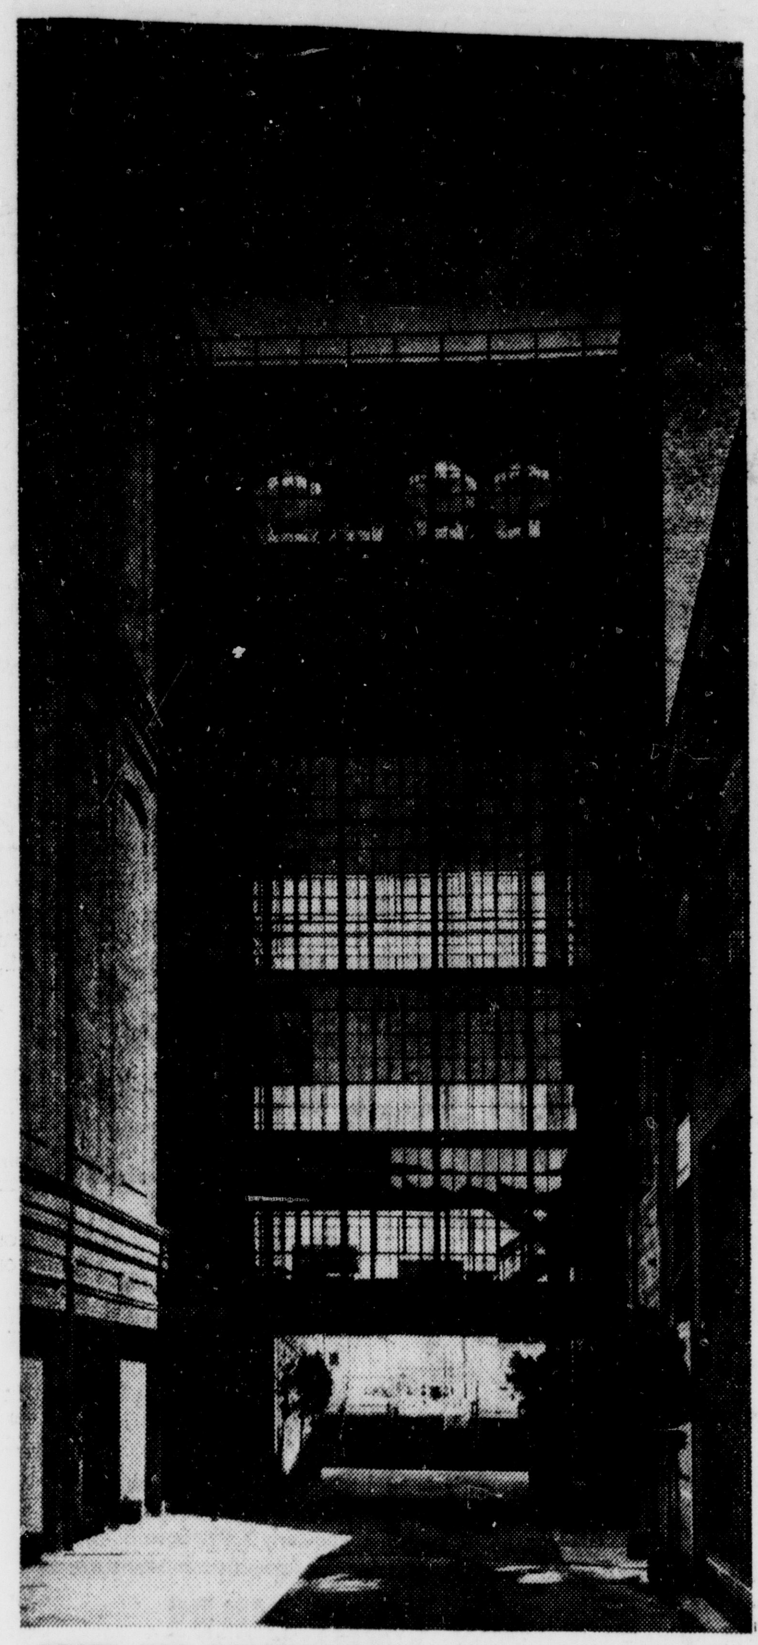
Marin Architects Figure In Prizes

Marin County architects figured in two of the nine projects that won 1972 nationwide honor awards from the American Institute of Architects, the institute announced today in Washington, D.C.

The Ice House I and II in San Francisco and the Weyerhauser headquarters building in Tacoma were among the award winners selected by a jury from more than 470 entries.

Architects for the Ice House building converted two vintage 1914, brick cold storage buildings into modern, wholesale furniture marts and connected them with a striking glass concourse. The work was designed by the firm of Wurster, Bernardi and Emmons, Inc. of San Francisco. Architects Theodore C. Bernardi and Donn Emmoms, both of Sausalito, are partners in the firm. Landscape architect for the modernization project was Lawrence Halprin Associates of Kentfield.

Skidmore, Owings and Merrill of San Francisco was the architectural firm for the massive Weyerhauser Corp. structure which stretches between two hills somewhat like the Marin County Civic Center. Partners in the architectural firm include Nathaniel Owings of Mill Valley and Douglas M. Merrill of Novato. Sasaki-Walker Associates of Sausalito was landscape architect.



PRIZE FOR REMODELING — Wurster, Bernardi and Emmons architects won American Institute of Architects honors for Ice House I and II on the San Francisco waterfront. Both Theodore C. Bernardi and Donn Emmons live in Sausalito.

Public Hearing Set On Novato Housing

Connect Charge Hike Shelved By Directors

North Marin County Water Dsitrict directors have put aside a proposal to raise the connection charge for new homes as a means of bolstering reserve funds for long-range improvements.

Dist. Mgr. Eugene S. Churchill said a series of motions on the porposed increase, $300 to $425, failed Thursday night and no action was taken.

Director Patrick Heffernan proposed that revenue from a higher charge be used to reduce the tax rate and director George A. Amaroli suggested spreading the charge over a two-year period, Churchill reported.

Evelyn Johnson, a director of the North Marin Federation of Homeowners, spoke in favor of increasing the charge, he said.

Directors also received a report that the Sonoma County Water Agency is considering increasing its rate for Russian River $10 an acre foot.

The cost to the district, which has a contract with the agency, would be an additional $42,000 a year, Churchill said.

One $5 increase would be for repayment of the general obligation bonds for the Petaluma aqueduct, and the levy would be against Petaluma, North Marin County Water District, Cotati and Rohnert Park, Churchill said.

The second proposed $5 increase would be charged "to all users of Russian River water" and would be used to provide reserve funds for major projects, he said.

Directors expressed concern about the use of the reserve fund and Heffernan didn't want the money to be used to serve new developments, Churchill said.

The North Marin County Water District board also:

WATER USE — Received a report from Churchill that water consumption last month was up 29.5 per cent from March, 1971, 129 millions gallons as compared to 99.9 million.

GROSSI RANCH — Authorized rancher George Grossi, whose ranch is near Lake Stafford, permission to draw water directly from the lake until next April.

MEETING SCHEDULE — Scheduled meetings on May 9 and 23, instead of the regularly scheduled meetings next month, at 8 p.m. at the district office, 999 Atherton Avenue.

Wildlife Study Is Announced

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — State water chief William R. Gianelli has announced a $1.4 million study program to investigate fish and wildlife problems on north coast rivers.

The combined federal-state project is specifically aimed at silt and sediment problems in the Trinity and Eel River areas, the effect of water releases on fisheries and the impact of dams.

In a statement, Gianelli, director of the Water Resources Department, said the U.S. Bureaus of Reclamation and Sport Fisheries and Wildlife will contribute $1 million to the project with state agencies picking up the rest of the cost.

In addition to Gianelli's department and the federal agencies, the Department ofish and Game will take part in the study.

Axion Players To Open 'Lovers' In Late May

The Axion Players — a student theater group in Marin — will present its second production, "Lovers," at 8:30 p.m. May 26 and 27 and June 2 and 3 at the Sir Francis Drake High School theater in San Anselmo.

The group also will stage the play at San Rafael High School June 9 and 10.

"Winners" is the story of two 17-year-old lovers, set on a hilltop in England, while "Losers" deals with a troubled 50-year-old suitor, set in Ireland.

"Winners" will be directed by Russ Blum of Sir Francis Drake High School. "Losers" will be directed by Kathy Rainey of College of Marin.

The cast is composed of students from Drake, San Rafael and Redwood high schools and the College of Marin.

Budget Session

The San Rafael Board of Education will discuss a 1972-73 preliminary budget at an adjourned meeting Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the schools administration building.

Honor Society Sets Initiation

Pi Delta Phi, the French honor society at Dominican College, will initiate five new members at a special program at 7 p.m. Tuesday in Fanjeaux Hall on the San Rafael campus.

The program will feature a lecture in French on playwright Eugene Ionesco by Roland Husson, French cultural attache, and a mime performance under the direction of associate professor Annette Lust.

Policemen May Be Needed In Halls Of City Schools

By GUY HALVERSON
The Christian Science Monitor News Service

CHICAGO, ILL. — Policemen permanently assigned to public schools? The issue is coming to a head in scores of cities throughout the U.S., the result of increasing instances of vandalism and assault in the schools.

Here in Chicago, an inquest is under way into the fatal shooting of a black Vietnam veteran in a school hallway by a public school security officer. The officer, an off-duty armed Chicago policeman, alleges that the veteran first pulled a revolver from a hip pocket.

As seen by Chicago's massive black community where criticism of the incident has been intense, the issue is critical. The giant Chicago school system maintains a security force of some 490 off-duty (and armed) Chicago policemen, plus another 40 unarmed civilians. Moreover, the police department itself has 48 officers assigned to maintaining order in schmols when called.

That police and security forces are increasingly active in school systems, however, is no longer in question. In mid 1970 the International City Management Association sent questionnaires to some 2,000 cities and found that 91 per cent of the police departments had some type of special programs for schools. In 94 of the cities — including some of the nation's largest — police had continuous, fulltime patrolling at selected or all public schools.

The controversy over use of security forces, it is widely recognized, is usually linked to the matter of guidelines.

In far too many cases, critics grumble, there are no precise policy guidelines regarding use of force, special training for the officers, and in some instances — the matter of civilian vs. police control of the officers.

In Chicago, the special school security force is controlled by school administrators. But the highly regarded Tucson, Ariz., program uses fulltime policemen at selected junior high schools and one high school.

Related is the very question of purpose. Should the police presence be a short-range situation — occasionally patrolling a school, or as need arises — or more permanent, perhaps day-by-day patrol?

And when the security men are fulltime policemen, how much latitude should the police departments themselves have?

In Philadelphia, following a police-black student clash in 1967, Police Commissioner Frank L. Rizzo (who was elected mayor last year) insisted on the right to place police in schools at his discretion. The school board balked, however, and in 1968 a policy was agreed upon whereby police were put under control of the school principals.

Some critics argue that a permanent "police presence" tends to overexpose students to police control at an impressionable age — and thus underline a "police state mentality."

"The idea of police in the academic community is plainly repugnant," argues James Pray, associate director of the Southern chapter of the Arizona Civil Liberties Union. "In addition to leading to a police mentality with students, it puts a premium on infidelity to one's friends."

The Tucson police department's "school resource program," in which some 12 armed officers work with schools, is primarily a "preventive" program aimed at thwarting juvenile delinquency, and not really a "security" patrol, says Lt. Donald Lowe, commander of the Community Youth Crime Prevention Force.

Though the ACLU fought the program at its inception (unsuccessfully), the program lately has met "very little resistance," he says.

Defenders of the use of police security forces — such as Edward D. Brady, who heads up Chicago's large school security program and was a founder of the International Association of School Security Officers — argue that a comprehensive security program can reduce assaults.

Last year assaults against employees dropped 6.6 per cent in Chicago schools, while severe assaults (requiring hospitalization) plummeted 47 per cent — certainly a result of the security program, says Brad.

For its part, the association is pushing a so-called "safe school act" that would let schools use federal funds to finance their own security forces. Sponsored by Rep. Jonathan Bingham (Dem.) of New York and cosponsored by Rep. Shirley Chisholm (Dem.) of New York and Louise Day Hicks (Dem.) of Massachusetts, among others, the bill would preclude use of federal funds to bring firearms, weapons, or chemical agents into schools.

One program — considered a model by some authorities — is that of the Palatine high school system, northwest of Chicago. The district, which takes in some 8000 from two communities (Palatine and Schaumburg townships), just happens to fall within the jurisdiction of three police agencies.

The law departments — along with the school districts — hammered out guidelines in the late 1960's whereby fulltime policemen are paid by the school district, wear civilian attire, and serve as counselors more than security men. Though armed, the officers' main function is preventive — again, as with Tucson, to ward off delinquency problems.

"The program is designed to help the young people adjust to society. It's not hostile," says Dr. Bruce Altergott, associate superintendent for the Palatine system. "We believe it's helped to bring about an increased respect and cooperation between students and the police.

One factor clouding the inquest here into the shooting of the black veteran — who was allegedly in the school to seek help from a teacher on a college course assignment he had — is that the hearing officer selected to preside over the inquest is Martin S. Gerber, who presided over a local inquest into the 1969 shooting by police of two young Black Panther leaders. That earlier inquest verdict, which held the shooting to be justifiable homicide, was later severely criticized by a federal grand jury.

Gerber was not himself personally criticized by the grand jury.

Valdosta's Naming

VALDOSTA, Ga. (UPI)—The city of Valdosta is named after the plantation of former Georgia Gov. George M. Troupe, which was known in 1860 as "Val d'Aosta." The town was first created in 1859 in Lowndes County to meet the first railroad in the area, but had to be moved four miles when the railroad missed the city by that distance.

1972 Boats — All Sizes, All Prices

From $10 Dinks to $374,000 70-Foot Luxury Yachts

By JACK WOLISTON

If you are shopping around with the idea of buying a new boat and seem a little confused, it's understandable.

Right now on the American market there are 2,932 distinctly different stock models being offered by 323 builders — and the price range is tremendous.

For just $10 you can become a member of the pleasure boat fraternity with an inflatable dink three feet, six inches long. On the other hand, you can spend $374,000 and head out to sea in a luxurious 70-foot motor yacht.

BUT IN between these two extremes you should be able to find the boat of your choice in the 1972 lineup of inboard cruisers, sterndrive and outboard boats, auxiliary sailboats, one-design and daysailers, houseboats, rowboats, canoes, and inflatable and specialty boats of every description.

And if you want to build your own, there's a big selection of kits and plans available.

This survey of what's available on today's pleasure boat market was compiled by Boating magazine for its 1972 Director of Boats and Equipment, a handy publication which lists manufacturers, the basic specifications of their products, and their prices.

THE SURVEY shows that powerboatmen this year have 1,697 different inboard, sterndrive and outboard boats to choose from — 58 per cent of all stock boats on the market, excluding houseboats.

In the sterndrive category, the survey showed there were 88 manufacturers offering 552 boats in lengths from 15 feet to 36 feet and costing from $2,650 to $45,000. There were 643 outboard models offered by 85 companies at prices ranging from $70 to $12,000.

The survey showed that sailors — be they racing or cruising buffs — have 587 different models to consider.

AUXILIARY-TYPE racing and cruising sailboats start with a 13½-foot catboat and go all the way up to an 82-foot ketch, with prices ranging from $1,595 to $175,000.

The survey showed that the range of houseboats and platform boats gets bigger each year. In 1972, there are 46 different brands of houseboats and platform boats ranging in size from 10 feet to 76 feet and in price from $350 to $190,000.

Among the rowboats, dinghies, canoes, inflatables and specialty boats, there are 465 models made by 91 companies. They start with that three-and-a-half-foot inflatable dinghy for $10 and go all the way up to a 43-foot workboat for $34,900.

And don't forget those boats you can build yourself from kits and plans. These are offered by 24 different companies. Plans for a tiny sailing craft cost just $6; a kit for a 56-foot fiberglass auxiliary cruiser hull goes for $9,900.

THE COVER

WHILE boating is a year-around sport in the San Francisco Bay Area, it does have its special busy season. And that season is launched annually with traditional, colorful festivities on the Bay. Tomorrow those opening of-the-season rites take place for 1972. And as is its custom, the Independent-Journal Marin Magazine again salutes the yachtsmen of Marin with its annual special boating edition, this one the biggest such boating issue in the publication's history. The artwork for the cover is by I-J staff artist Jack Lucey.

Texas Leads In Boating

Texas became the nation's best market for small pleasure boats, outboard motors and boat trailers in 1971, according to a research study by the Boating Industry Associations.

The Lone Star State maintained its four-year hold on the top spot in outboard boat sales, corralling 9.89 per cent of the national market. It held its five-year lead in boat trailer sales, accounting for 11.72 per cent of the market. And it displaced Florida as the nation's top outboard motor market, claiming 8.90 per cent of sales nationally.

Florida was runner-up in all three categories: 7.12 per cent of boat sales, 7.99 per cent of trailer sales and 8.03 per cent of motor sales.

Other leaders:

Outboard boats: Minnesota: Minnesota, 6.60 per cent; Wisconsin, 5.78 per cent; Michigan, 5.48 per cent; New York, 5.27 per cent; Louisiana, 4.41 per cent; California, 3.96 per cent; Ohio, 3.50 per cent; and South Carolina, 3.18 per cent.

Boat trailers: Louisiana, 5.87 per cent; Wisconsin, 4.71 per cent; New York, 4.20 per cent; Michigan and California, each 4.02 per cent; Minnesota, 3.84 per cent; Ohio, 3.39 per cent; and South Carolina, 3.39 per cent.

Outboard motors: New York, 6.07 per cent; Minnesota, 5.24 per cent; Wisconsin, 5.06 per cent; Michigan, 4.86 per cent; Louisiana, 4.70 per cent; California, 4.65 per cent; Illinois, 3.55 per cent; and Ohio, 3.41 per cent.

Another Boating Season To Open

Bay Festivities Set Tomorrow

By RON LENT

Marin County boating enthusiasts searching for seafaring pleasures can enjoy the yacht season opening festivities on San Francisco Bay tomorrow.

A highlight of this annual spectacular will be the Corinthian Yacht Club of Tiburon-sponsored blessing of the fleet. Some 2,000 pleasure boats ranging from sailboats to motorboats will be deckedout in royal and, conceivably, in gaudy splendor befitting the day's pageantry.

CEREMONIES begin at 7:30 in the Corinthian Yacht Club with a breakfast, pledge to the Flag and a pray for war dead.

At this time, four Navy leaders will be honored. They are: Rear Adm. C. J. Van Arsdall Jr., Rear Adm. W. S. Guest, Rear Adm. Henry J. Johnson and Rear Adm. Mark Whalan. Belvedere and Tiburon political dignitaries including Rep. William S. Mailliard, representing parts of Marin County and San Francisco, will also attend.

After breakfast, guests will board the United States Navy destroyer D. D. Perkins to hear the United States Navy Band and partake in the blessing ceremonies, officiated over by religious leaders Rabbi M. Arthur Oles of San Francisco's Mt. Zion Hospital; Capt. George Wright, Treasure Island chaplain; and Fr. George Johnson of St. Hilary's Catholic Church in Tiburon.

THE ON-SHIP rites, set for approximately 9 a.m., will feature the passage of the expected 2,000 pleasure ships. As the vessels pass by the destroyer, the three religious leaders will deliver the blessings. Meanwhile, a San Francisco fireboat will deliver a baptism-like spray in augmenting the religious leaders' words for "The Blessings of the Plesaure Crafts" on the Raccoon Straits between Angel Island and the Corinthian Yacht Club.

"This blessing," explained Capt. Elmer Towle, originator of the event, "in essence, wishes good will and safety on the waters for both the boats and the captains.

"And, if the captians so desire, they can receive a scroll of blessing signed by each of the three men of the cloth."

Once receiving the blessings, the ships proceed to the parade-on-the-bay starting positions beneath the Golden Gate Bridge. The 10 a.m. parade, scheduled to inaugurate the new yachting season, will move past the San Francisco Marina to the Farry Building and break up at Pier 45.

"Before the activities conclude a myriad of colorfully decorated ships will have passed by boating fans. Most of the ships will have decorations with balloons and fancy-colored flags. Some ships will have themes or ideas to project, like an Irish four-leaf clover," Towle pointed out. "Certainly, there will be something there to please everyone."

If colors and themes fail to impress viewers, possibly the vigorous Marin County Club participation in the program will.

AMONG THE 64 yacht clubs participating, are the Corinthian Yacht Club, San Francisco Yacht Club of Belvedere, Sausalito Yacht Club, Sausalito Cruising Club, Paradise Cay Yacht Club, Strawberry Cove Yacht Club, Marin Yacht Club, San Rafael Yacht Club, Bel Marin Keys Yacht Club, Loch Lomond Yacht Club and Gallinas Yacht Club.

Additionally, the Coast Guard will be on hand to assure greater safety in the extremely-crowded bay.

Boat Builders See Record '72

Industry's Signs Point To A Prosperous Season

A prosperous new season is anticipated by the recreational boating industry as 1972 begins with all economic indicators pointing the way out of recession and into a year which many industry figures foresee as the best in boating's history.

Sales of boats, engines, equipment and marine services during the 1970-71 model year were significantly higher than figures for 1969-70, and the upward trend is certain to continue as consumer dollars, hoarded during the recession and loosened by the federal wage-price freeze, are spent on recreation in general and boating in particular this spring and summer.

Boat dealers placed larger than usual orders earlier than usual last fall in anticipation of spring's customers, and the industry is showing confidence in a year certain to be good, and just liable to be the best ever.

A survey of leading fiberglas boatbuilders by the Reinforced Plastics-Composites Institute reveals that heavy investments in new and improved plants and facilities have been made in anticipation of a 1971-72 model year which is hoped will show increases of 10 per cent to 12 per cent in sales. More than half of the builders surveyed expected 1972 sales increases of more than 25 per cent, a few were preparing for 50 per cent higher sales.

The industry's 1971 increase began in February when dollar volume figures were up 22 per cent over the previous February. In June, the increase was a heartening 47 per cent. During August, the final month of the model year, outboard motor shipments were 74.3 per cent higher in units and 71.8 per cent higher in dollar value than comparable figures for the previous August.

During the past model year — September, 1970, to the end of August, 1971 — the dollar value of boating goods sold rose 11.8 per cent over the dollar-value total for the previous year. Boats were up 2.4 per cent in units shipped and 2.7 per cent in dollar value, outboard motors were up a substantial 21.4 per cent in units shipped and 33.3 per cent in dollar value. There were 495,000 outboard motors sold in 1971, compared with 430,000 the previous year. Industry sources estimate that $3,610,000,000 was spent at the retail level during 1971 for boats, engines, marine equipment, used boats, fuel and such services as dockage and club fees, storage and repairs. The previous year's retail-spending total was $3,440,000,000.

The average horsepower of outboard motors sold in 1971 was 35.6, up from 31.0 in 1970. Over 40 per cent of the motors were 45 horsepower or more, an increase of 10 percentage points over last year.

The average length of outboard boats purchased in the year was 15.6 feet. Stern drive boat sales tallied in 1971 were estimated at 44,000.

The three top outboard motor sales/markets in 1971 were the same as in 1970, proving that the big get bigger, at least in boating. Texas hung on to the number one sales spot, adding to its great legends of bigness. Believe it or not, an estimated 39,700 motors were sold within its boundaries. Florida, often promoted as the boating capital of the world, was a close second with sales of 39,500, while number three was New York responsible for 30,000 motor sales. Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, Louisiana and California delivered sales to the industry ranging from 23,000 to over 25,000 each.

But New York remained in the market with more boating customers, if usage of outboard motors is a gauge. About 593,000 of them, more than in any other state, were operating in 1971, and that could mean there were more purchasers of gasoline, boating supplies and equipment than elsewhere. Texas, Florida and California trailed the Empire State by about 150,000 each.

Marine dealers increased their average gross income by about 5 per cent in 1970, according to the trade publication Boating Industry. The average dealer gross was $275,000 during 1970, compared with $262,000 during 1969. The one-year lag in figures is the time it takes to collect retail reports.

Dealers profited not only from the industry's upswing but from sales generated by newspaper advertising and local promotional programs. The annual survey by the National Association of Engine and Boat Manufacturers shows that the nation's newspaprs featured more pages devoted to boating advertising and editorial coverage during the first half of 1971 than in any comparable period in the past. The 136 newspapers surveyed — representing 109 cities in 36 states — published 164 special boating sections during 1971, a 16.3 per cent increase in the number of such sections published the previous year.

Boat shows were the most common of the special-section themes, accounting for 61 per cent of the 164 boating sections and publicizing most of the nation's annual boat shows. The 135 newspapers published a total of 2,495 pages of boating news and advertising during 1971 for an average of 18.4 pages per paper.

31' CATALINA

Unless you see it for yourself, it's hard to believe.

Inside this all-fiberglass Catalina is as much cabin space as you'd find in many larger houseboats. The unique bow configuration, provides 23% more living space than you would ordinarily have in 31 feet. Best of all, note how well Chris-Craft has put the space to use. You get house boat accommodation wrapped up in a blue water hull.

There are convertible lounges oppsoite each other in the main cabin, twin berths in the private forward stateroom to make the total sleeping capacity for six. A berth forward converts into a sitting lounge, and thanks to the extra-wide stateroom door, eleven people can be seated comfortably in conversation.

A smart fiberglass hardtop is optional over the wide cockpit, and a helmsman seat and footrest are standard.

The exciting new model offers twin screw options of 235-hp Chris-Craft V-8 engines or 145-hp diesels.

Place all this on top of a gigantic six-sleeper interior w/lower station controls, the privacy of an enclosed forward stateroom, the luxury of rich natural philippine mahogany, the brightness and livability and extra headroom of a sedan deckhouse.

Then just aft, put a 9' x 9' cockpit.

This model is loaded in every area with the features that families, fishing enthusiasts and their companions want most . . .

Gas Turbines Arrive For Big Boats

That's Major 1972 News For Larger Power Craft

There were plenty of big new power craft for 1972, but the big news in the big-boat category is the debut of the first gas turbine engines ever offered for sale in production models.

Pacemaker and Chris-Craft have taken the first steps in introducing the economical, powerful turbines to the pleasure boat market.

Two of the gas turbines, each developing 450 horsepower, are offered in Pacemaker's 48-foot Sportsfisherman. Each weighs less than half as much, and requires a third less space, than a comparable diesel, yet they can be run all day flat out. That's why the specs say the top speed of 26.8 miles per hour is also the cruising speed.

Both Pacemaker and the Ford Motor Co., which built the turbines, say they will, in time, revolutionize the marine propulsion field for big power boats. Price of the turbine-equipped Sportsfisherman is $98,000. The turbines are production models in Ford's 3600 series.

CHRIS-CRAFT is offering the Ford turbine in its 55-foot Commander yacht, but the engine is in the 4200 series that produces 500 shaft hp. The boat sleeps ten in luxury, and her price is around $167,000.

Other newsmakers in the big boat fleet are a new 38-foot Sedan Cruiser from Egg Harbor, only the second model to bear that name to be built in fiberglass; a new 41-foot double cabin flying bridge cruiser from Concorde, and a new 38-foot Sportfisherman from Bertram.

As for trends, quite a few builders are taking a given hull design and offering it in a choice of models such as a sportsfisherman, a sedan or express cruiser, a hardtop day cruiser or just a comfortable family boat.

WINNER BOATS, which this year is celebrating its 25th year since building the first fiberglass production boat, offers its new 24-foot fiberglass cruiser almost anyway you want it; as a Family Fishing Bridge model, an Overnight Hardtop or a Sportsman Convertible. Winner also is introducing a new 28-foot Family Express Six Sleeper, a companion boat to the flybridge model first introduced last year.

An interesting option on the new boat is an all-fiberglass keel and skeg for shoal-water protection with a 225-horsepower Chrysler inboard. The Family Express sells for $19,914.

Egg Harbor's new glass boat is a powerful big-game hunter with twin 330-horsepower engines as standard power. She sleeps six, has a complete galley, enclosed head, teak cockpit and stern decks. She sells for $41,000.

PACEMAKER, parent firm to Egg Harbor, also has a new Sportsfisherman, a 26-footer which is available as an Express Cruiser. Both models have a 220-horsepower V-8 Crusader as standard power, giving them a top speed of 28 miles per hour.

Concorde's new boat is said to be one of the most spacious cruising yachts in its hull size on the market. The boat has been built to eliminate all interior bulkheads, with the living, cooking, dining and sleeping areas comprising a big open salon with over 150 square feet of unobstructed space. Add to this another 55 square feet on the flying bridge, and 140 square feet of aft deck area, and you have a total of just under 350 square feet of living area — about as much, says Concorde, as a modest-sized town house.

With a pair of T325 Mer-Cruiser inboards as standard power, the new 41 sells for $62,500.

Bertram Yacht's new 38 foot Sportsfisherman is called Tournament Moppie, and as the name suggests, she's designed to get out to where the big ones lurk and bring them home.

A CLASSIC Bertram deep-vee hull design, Tournament Moppie has a top speed of 34 miles per hour, with power provided by a pair of 325-horsepower Mer-Cruisers. She sleeps four to six, and features no fewer than three steering stations; one on the flying bridge, one inside the main cabin, and a third in the roomy cockpit. With standard power, she sells for $52,390, and with a pair of 283-horsepower GM8V-53 diesels, the price tag reads $69,890.

Bertram, long known for fast, sleek medium-size cruisers and fishermen, has come out with a Convertible-Sport Fisherman or Motor Yacht 46-footer that will be ogled by big-boat buffs around the world.

The fishing convertible powered with two GM diesels, is the result of two years research and design work, offering interior accommodations on three levels.

THE COCKPIT is separated from the main cabin by a few steps and sliding glass doors. The cabin is truly plush and spacious, with bar, complete entertainment center, sofa and drop-leaf table. A few steps down and forward is a fishermen's galley with separate freezer and refrigerator, three-burner stove and all the accouterments one would expect. A few more steps down and forward is the main living area, with owner's stateroom to port and guest cabin forward. Both have full heads.

Four of Chris-Craft's big-boat models are new or redesigned for 1972. Biggest is a 41-foot Commander, a tri-cabin model with a walkaround flush deck that's said to be the forerunner of a new and wider family of Commanders. With a pair of 300-horsepower engines, she sells for $65,450.

FOR THE FIRST TIME, in 1972, the 48-foot Pacemaker Sportsfisherman is being offered with gas turbine power. With twin 3600 Ford engines rated at 350 horsepower at 3,000 revolutions per minute, the luxury craft sells for $98,000.

THIS IS THE NEW Hatteras 42 Convertible available with twin 300 horsepower gasoline engines, twin GM 6-71 diesels or twin Cummins 903 diesels. The luxury fingerglass sports yacht has berths for six people in her length of 42 feet eight inches and beam of 13 feet 10 inches. She is priced at about $105,000, including a long list of equipment.

In the Catalina line, Chris-Craft is showing a pair of 28-footers. One is a new Coho Sedan cruiser with standard command bridge, berths for six, twin 200-horsepower engines and a price tag of $16,900.

THE OTHER 28-footer will be a surprise to boatmen accustomed to the Chris-Craft tradition of luxury. The Catalina Sportsman is sold virtually stripped, with only a hardtop and a 235-horsepower engine as standard equipment, for a rock-bottom price of $9,900. From then on, the options include twin-engine power, galley equipment, dinette, V-berth pads and command bridge.

In sharp contrast, the new Hatteras 42 Convertible is a luxurious sedan cruiser with three different cabin areas, full interior carpeting, optional air conditioning with reverse-cycle heating, and upper and lower berths in the master stateroom. The new boat continues the Hatteras appearance of the past few years with a wide bow flare, clean sweep aft of sheer line and enlarged flying bridge.

There's six feet four inches of headroom throughout most of her interior and her galley is worthy of a Cordon Bleu cook. The new model is 42 feet eight inches overall, carries 150 gallons of fresh water and 400 gallons of fuel. With the proper twin GM or Cummins diesels, she can be had for about $104,000. Twin 300 horsepower gasoline engines are optional.

VIRTUALLY ALL production cruisers are made of fiberglass. The state of the art in manufacturing these luxurious craft has progressed to the point where Chris-Craft, for example, makes its new Commander 41 in a single-cavity mold, instead of joining together sections from two molds.

Ease of maintenance dominates below-decks decor, with vinyl and wood laminates in great profusion. There are the luxury options such as air conditioning, stereo systems, built-in vacuum systems and electric refrigeration, plus such practical options as holding tanks for heads for boats subject to strict waste discharge controls.

A New Use For The Bike Lock

How to prevent the theft of your outboard motor?

Using a bicycle lock may come as a surprise to you. But, as National Automobile Club points out, that bicycle lock makes a handy safeguard.

First tighten the motor down on the transom. Then insert the bicycle lock through the small holes in the turnscrew handles.

Now your motor locks in place. And no thief can loosen the handles.

How To Go About Selecting A Seaworthy Used Boat

If he doesn't like the sport, his financial loss isn't too great. If he does like it, he's apt to trade up to a new model before too long.

The best way for the used boat buyer to avoid disenchantment with the sport is to choose a good rig the first time, advises the Boating Industry Assn.

Determining the true condition of a used boat usually is a job for professionals. If you are planning to lay out big money for a large cruiser, you should have a marine surveyor check it out for you. He will charge a fairly stiff fee — but it's usually worth it in the long run, BIA points out.

IF YOU HAPE your eye on a more modest craft, your only recourse is to depend on the integrity of the seller — and your own ability to spot possible flaws.

A tip-off on how the boat has been maintained and serviced is the general condition of the building or boatyard in which it is stored. If it is neat, clean and well-organized, chances are the boat has received similar treatment.

Before checking details, tand off a few feet and study the overall appearance of the hull. Are thare any bad spots which indicate excessive wear? Are there any signs of leakage? Are there any indications that repair work has been done — and, if so, was the repair work done properly? Is the paint in good condition? Are there any signs of rust, corrosion or damage from polluted water or aquatic plant life?

GO AHEAD, thump it! (You probably will anyway.) As you do, be on the lookout for excessive softness (if it's a wood hull), or for a "thin skin" (if it's fiberglass or metal).

Better still, bring a small hammer with you to do your thumping. It will save wear and tear on your knuckles and tell you more about the condition of the hull.

Peeled, cracked or discolored paint or varnish on a wood hull is a tip-off that water has seeped between the finish and the wood. While this is not necessarily serious, be sure by checking for damaged planking or dry rot.

Poke the suspected area with the tip of a small pen knife. If it punctures easily, somewhat like cardboard, it's dry rot. This means you will probably face extensive repair work.

AFTER YOU'RE convinced that the basic hull is sound, it's time to turn your attention to the power unit. If it's an outboard, check to see if it's under or over-powered. Most manufacturers affix a plate to the hull indicating the boat's maximum safe horsepower capacity.

If it's an inboard, look closely at the propeller, shaft and shaft bearing or stuffing box. Propeller blades frequently are nicked or bent and serious harm can be done to the shaft and engine if the boat has been operated any length of time with a damaged prop. Also check the shaft for signs of wear or excessive slack.

Now, walk around the boat and inspect the accessories — lights, steering and fuel systems, flotation, etc. Statistics indicate that this is the area where you can expect trouble to develop first. Industry-wide standards for most of these components have been established by BIA, and there are federal and state regulations regarding such items as lights, fuelsystems and ventilation.

IF YOU'RE NOT a naval architect or marine surveyor, the best way to insure that the boat complies with these standards and regulations is to look for the BIA certification plate. This plate certifies that it has been inspected by an independent testing laboratory and found to be in compliance with industry practices and applicable regulations when il left the factory.

Finally, look closely inside the hull and cabin for possible rot. This usually shows up on the underside of decks, outboard ends of beams, frames, thwarts, the flooring and at the lower end of the bulkheading. If it is fiberglass, check the same areas for delamination (separation) or fractures in the surface.

Many so-called "good deals" in used boats turn sour. However, if you follow the routine recommended by BIA, you will have reasonable assurance that the boat you buy is basically seaworthy.

The Sports Craft Are The Glamor Boats Of This Year

Sports boats are the glamor boats this year with emphasis on versatility and speed.

It's the rare manufacturer of power craft in the 15 to 25-foot range who isn't building a racy model with initials like GT, SS or X in front of its name to highlight his line of runabouts, utility boats, campers and ski boats.

Of the 11 Chris-Craft boats shown in New York's 1972 Boat Show, no fewer than seven were products of the company's Sport Boat Division, including the jet-powered 18-footer, which will take up to a 400-horsepower mill coupled to an underwater jet pump.

Winner's entry in the high-performance field is the GTX-SS, a 16-foot six-inch "bomb" which will take outboards up to 85 horsepower. She has custom swivel bucket seats, a wrap-around contour rear seat and "spoiler" rear deck design. She sells for $1,799.

WHEN YOU see Larson Boats new Shark 1800 with her optional air foil, you'll see fancy sport-boat design. A rugged bowrider, she comes with recliner-swivel bucket seats, wraparound stern seat and either outboard or stern drive power.

Other trends observable in the 1972 inboard-outboard fleet are an almost universal use of fiberglass, swiveling bucket seats for the helmsman and companion, padded rear decks for sunbathing or lounging, padded cockpit seats with contoured arm rests and fully carpeted cockpit floors.

Cuddy cabins are making something of a comeback, and when you get up around 18 to 20 feet, you'll find there is a choice of either outboard or stern drive power in the same boat.

BOWRIDERS seem to have captured the runabout fild, but Glastron's new V-215 Vagabond Camper is a bowrider with a difference. She has a roomy cuddy cabin behind her bow compartment with full-length berths for two and hide-away head and toilet. The cockpit has fold-down sunlounger seats, and there's a handy swimming ladder which folds down from its recess in the transom.

Stern-drive power options include either a Glastron 170 or 210, or a Mer-Cruiser 165.

Glastron also is building a new sport boat, the CV-16 SS, in metalflake gold or red hull colors, with wraparound windshield, padded dash, glove box, woodgrain steering wheel, and wraparound bucket seats for four. Powered by a Glastron 130-horsepower sterm drive unit, she sells for $4,099.

LYMAN BOATS, which has been building wooden craft at its Sandusky, Ohio plant, since 1875, is introducing two new fiberglass models for 1972, both with traditional Lyman lapstrake hull design. The Sebring 19 runabout has reached 42 miles per hour with a 155-horsepower V-6 engine, and the Biscayne 24 has hit 35 miles per hour with a 200-horsepower inboard.

The 183 Adventurer from National Boat Works has a traditional V-shaped bow, but she's a bowrider just the same. At 18-feet, four-inches on the centerline, she'll be representative of a new and bigger line of these comfortable watercraft.

CHRIS-CRAFT says it is responding to customer demand by bringing back its classic inboard runabout. It's called the Lancer Inboard, 23 feet long, with a hull recess that reduces draft some nine inches. Powered by a 235-horsepower direct drive unit, the new Lancer Inboard sells for $7,975.

The AristoCraft 19 is the only boat built by the Atlanta Boat Works, and it's a versatile craft which comes as a hardtop day cruiser or a big open fishing boat. In either configuration, she's distinguished by a flared rear transom which provides a six-foot-wide sun deck across the stern.

Within her deep-vee hull, the AristoCraft 19 has 30 cubic feet of foam flotation, making her virtually unsinkable. Standard equipment includes a built-in, inuulated ice chest, recessed ski or fish stowage beneath the cockpit floor, carpeting, bow and stern rails and seats for six.

WITH A 120-horsepower MerCruiser or OMC tern drive as standard power, she sells for $4,165.

Why Port, Starboard?

One source gives this explanation:

"It was a custom among the Vikings 1,000 years ago to tie up to docks and quays with the left sides of their ships shoreward. That's how the left side of a ship came to be called the 'uport' side. And because of this custom, the rather fragile steering rudders of their double-ended ships were rigged on the right side, so they would not be in danger of brushing against a quay and suffering damage. Thus, the modern term for the right side of the boar, 'starboard,' comes from the Viking word for 'steering board.' "

The 1972 Trend Is Toward Racy Models

Thunderbird Products, the runabout and sports partner of Pacemaker has four new fiberglass runabouts: the Comanche 187, a cathedral-hull design with forward cuddy cabin and berths for two, and the Apache 187 bowrider. Under the Formula name, Thunderbird has at least two new sport boats to offer: the Formula 190 and the Formula 177, both with engine gptions that begin with a 165-horsepower MerCruiser and go to a 245-horsepower OMC.

At the top of the medium-sized field are boats such as the new Commodore 25-foot cruiser from Cruisers, Inc. She's a full-cabin model with berths for four, stand-up enclosed head with optional holding system, complete galley with optional refrigerator and heavy-duty vinyl top with boot. She's also available with an optional Camper top and stern cross-bunk seating assembly for extended cruising. Power options begin with a 165-horsepower MerCruise and a price tag of $10,495.

MFG BOATS is another firm to offer a cruiser which can double as a camper. The Gypsy 21 E-Z Cruiser has berths for two and a modified flying bridge with an interesting option: either a companion seat to the helmsman' seat, or a plug-in self-contained unit which includes sink, icebox and cutting board.

All three of Crestliner's 1972 fiberglass runabouts were co-designed by Jim Wynne, the ocean racer, and Fred Hudson, a well-known marine engineer.

The Crusader 19 is a cuddy-cabin model with two berths, deep-vee hull and either outboard or stern drive power. The Crusader 17 bowrider seats at least eight, and the Muskie 18 bowrider also is surprisingly roomy.

SEA RAY BOATS has four different versions of its SRV 240 model for 1972: the Weekender, with galley, head and bunks for two; the 240CC, a cuddy-cabin model with two bunks and a rear cockpit seat which converts into a double berth; the 240 HT, a sporty hardtop, and the 240 FB, a flybridge version. Power options for all models begin with 165-horsepower MerCruiser stern drive and go up to 245-horsepower OMC's. The price range is $7,845 to $10,395.

Still another builder offering variations on a single theme is IMP Boats, which is building a flybridge version and an open cockpit version of its Inca day cruiser. The bridge model has a four-seater lounge which converts into upper and lower berths, complete with bunk ladder, and an optional recirculating head.

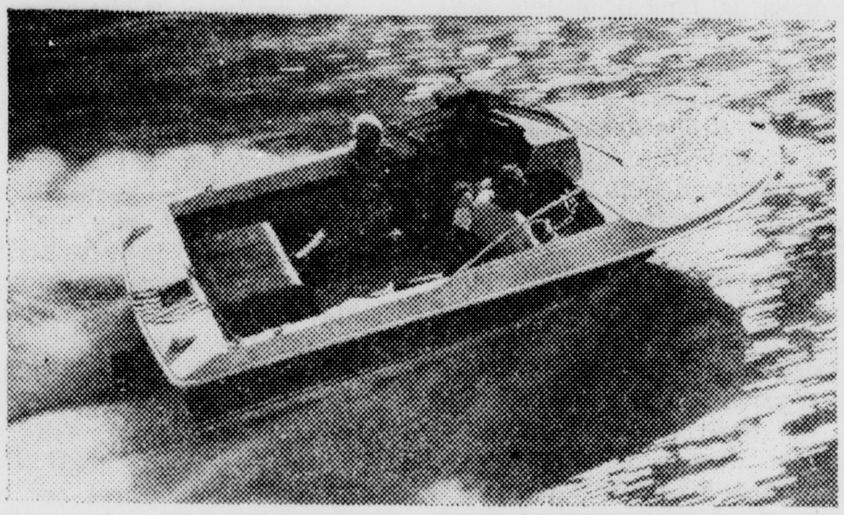
And yes, there's a sport boat model, too, the X-246, with racing-strength gas tank, cuddy cabin with bunks, recirculating head, matched helm and companion seats, hideaway folding top and a full stern seat. With twin 165-horsepower MerCruiser stern drives, she sells for $13,175.

TO MARK its Golden Jubilee year in boatbuilding, Penn Yan Boats is introducing a new Montego series of open-cockpit runabouts, all with the company's exclusive tunnel-drive propulsion system. The new Montego 220 has a dark-brown lapstrake hull, rakish bow, high-backed bucket pedestal seats and an upholstered gunwhale pad. With a 96-inch beam, she can handle two berths with optional holding tank.

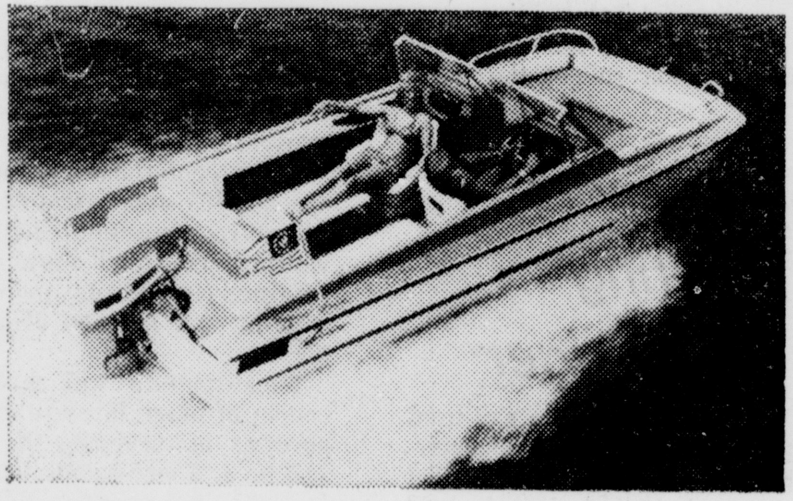
With Tunnel-Drive power of 210-horsepower, the new boat sells for $7,370.

Finally, for fishermen who prize comfort, Ouachita Marine has some elegant new Convincer models. The Model U is 16 feet long, has a complete steering system with either wheel or stick steering, two rocking and swiveling bucket seats, turf carpeting, rod holders and built-in flotation. She'll take outboards up to 95-horsepower, and sells for $1,328.94.

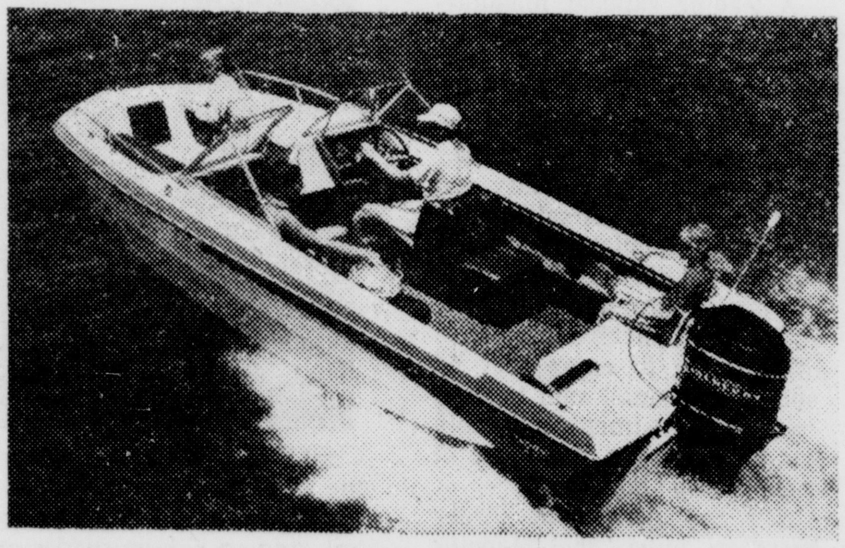
The Model K Convincer is 14 feet, four inches LOA, with options that include an anchor winch system and an electric bow trolling motor. List price, including two rocking swivel seats, is $860.14.



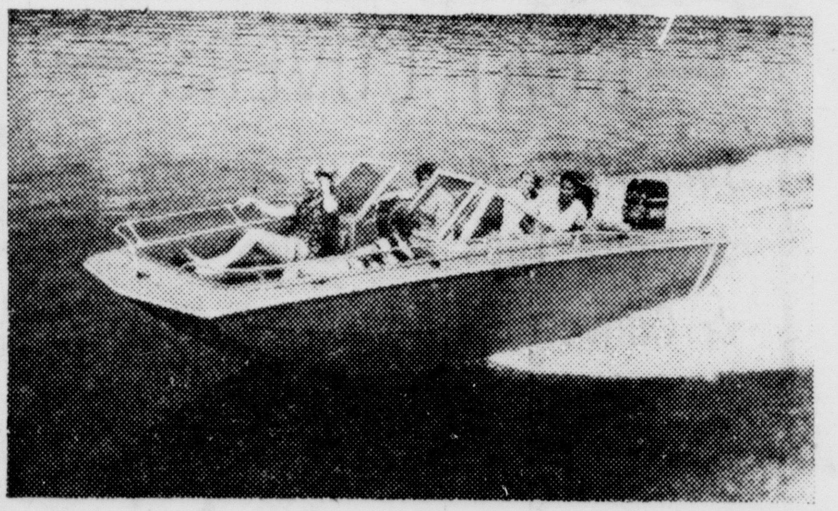
CRESTLINER OF Little Falls, Minn., has introduced the Crusader 17 for 1972, with 120 horsepower MerCruiser stern drive. The fiberglass boat sells for $1,995.



THE FORWARD passenger seat on this 16-foot, four-inch Shark 165 swivels for easy sunbathing, while the split windshield provides easy access to the forward cockpit. The new boat is being built by Larson Boats of Little Falls, Minn., for outboards up to 140 horsepower, and retails for $1,950.



AN IMPROVED 1972 version of the V-176 Swinger from the Glastron Boat Co. of Austin, Tex., features a transom that can take up to 150 horsepower. The 17-foot, eight-inch bowrider costs $1,849.



A DEEP V BOWRIDER for 1972 with cathedral hull is the fiberglass Pompano CX-191 built by Caravelle Boat Co. of Jacksonville, Fla. The 19-footer is 90 inches wide, can take up to 185 horsepower and sells for $2,429.

New Big Sailboats Are For Cruising

This could be the year that the manufacturers of big sailboats come to grips with reality.

The reality is that about 90 per cent of the people who prefer sail to power prefer cruising to racing. A look at some of the bigger auxiliary sailboats discloses that their builders have abandoned the fiction that a comfortable cruising boat also can be a competitive ocean racer.

At least four new sailboats, from three different builders, are cruisers all the way. All three have opted for double-cabin designs, with midships cockpits and private staterooms aft. There's a further similarity in such features as shoal draft, for easy gunkholing, and diesel power for long range, low cost and dependability.

ALLIED'S NEW 39-foot Mistress is typical of this new, clear-eyed trend. Displacing just over 20,000 pounds, she draws only four and a half feet of water. She sleeps six, two in a roomy aft cabin which also includes a hanging locker, dresser and head with optional shower.

Beneath the cockpit floor, there's a passageway allowing dry access to the forward cabin despite the weather. Dedicated cruising sailors will appreciate the built-in workbench and chart desk in the passageway.

On deck, Mistress is ruggedly-rigged, with oversized standing rigging, husky aluminum spars and no fewer than five winches as standard equipment. She spreads 700 square feet of sails, is $37,895.

TED IRWIN has two new boats which reflect the trend toward pure cruising. Both the Irwin 37 and the Irwin 32½ are double-cabin models. Each is available as a sloop or a ketch, and each draws an inch less than four feet.

In the Irwin 37, the aft cabin has two single berths flanking a built-in sofa, a head with shower and a hanging locker. In the Irwin 32½, there's no head in the aft cabin, but there is a double berth to starboard and an upholstered sofa and bureaus to port. In both models, there's a passageway beneath the cockpit floor connecting fore and aft cabins.

The bigger of the two new Irwins, with a 40 horsepower Westerbeke diesel, sells for $29,000 as a sloop and $31,845 as a ketch. Both prices are less sails. List price of the Irwin 32½, as a sloop, is $18,900.

THEN THERE'S the Pearson 390, designed by Bill Shaw, another double-cabin sloop with unusual straight-line, raised-deck design. The 13-foot beam on the Pearson 390 is carried far aft, giving the aft cabin an unusual amount of room.

A keel-centerboarder, the 390 spreads 663 square feet of sail. Standard equipment includes winches, bow and stern rails, lifelines and gates, pedestal steering and hot and cold water.

Trend-spotters will make a couple of other interesting discoveries in surveying the 1972 sail fleet. There seems to be a

Beginners Starting Out Bigger

Persons learning to sail used to start out with a small centerboarder in the 12-to-16 foot range, but that doesn't hold true today.

A good many beginners still learn the fundamentals in the smaller boats but more and more are starting in larger craft.

A leading sailboat manufacturer lists two reasons for this change:

Cruising sailboats cost less than they used to and more people have had the opportunity to experience the stability and comforts of a larger sailboat.

As this manufacturer points out — today the first sailboat is not just to learn on because the skill comes quickly; there is so much more to enjoy that by adding a a small sum to their original investment a family can actually get more out of their "second home."

CHRYSLER'S 15-foot daysailer, the Mutineer, introduced in 1972, has a 145-square-foot sail area, a kick-up rudder and twin self-bailers. The Mutineer retails for about $1,585.

move toward putting at least two and sometimes four berths in sailboats as small as 20 feet; and sailboats which can be trailered or used as campers, either ashore or afloat, are becoming more common.

THE NEW O'Day 22 is just 21-feet eight inches long, yet she has berths for four inside her hull. A fin-keel model, she draws under two feet of water, carries 200 square feet of sail, and sells for $2,795.

Douglass & McLeod has a new 22-footer, the D&M 22, for 1972. While designed specifically for racing to the IOR quarter-ton rule, she can be cruised in comfort, with berths for four and an enclosed head below. She sells for $6,000.

Fiberglass is the almost unanimous choice of sailboat builders showing medium sized to big sailboats in the market. There's a continued trend toward modern underwater shapes, with spade rudders and short keels. Increasingly, such former options as winches, roller reefing and vents are becoming standard equipment, along with showers or shower options, full genoa gear and a lavish use of teak for deck trim and cabin joinerwork.

SMALL SAILBOATS provide their share of what's new for 1972. As is the case with their larger sisters, the daysailers and smaller fun boats mostly are made of fiberglass or some form of plastic composition.

A surprising number of the little craft are unsinkable, a trend begun several years ago and continuing stronger. Their popularity also continues unabated, because of their versatility, modest cost, ease of transport, and the many hours of genuine delight they provide for young and old in sheltered waters.

Some examples of new small daysailers come from Cape Cod Shipbuilding, AMF Alcort and Chrysler Corp., for 1972.

THE NEW Cape Cod Cat, designed by Charles Wittholz, a well-known naval architect, offers either the traditional gaff or a Marconi masthead rig, with a further option of a fixed keel or a centerboard. She is 17 feet long, five inches shorter on the waterline, and with her seven-foot 11-inch beam retains the width associated with a cat.

More Horses

The average outboard motor purchased in 1971 was 35.6 horsepower, according to a survey conducted by the Boating Industry Associations. That's an increase of 5.6 horsepower from 1970. Boat size increased to 15.6 feet.

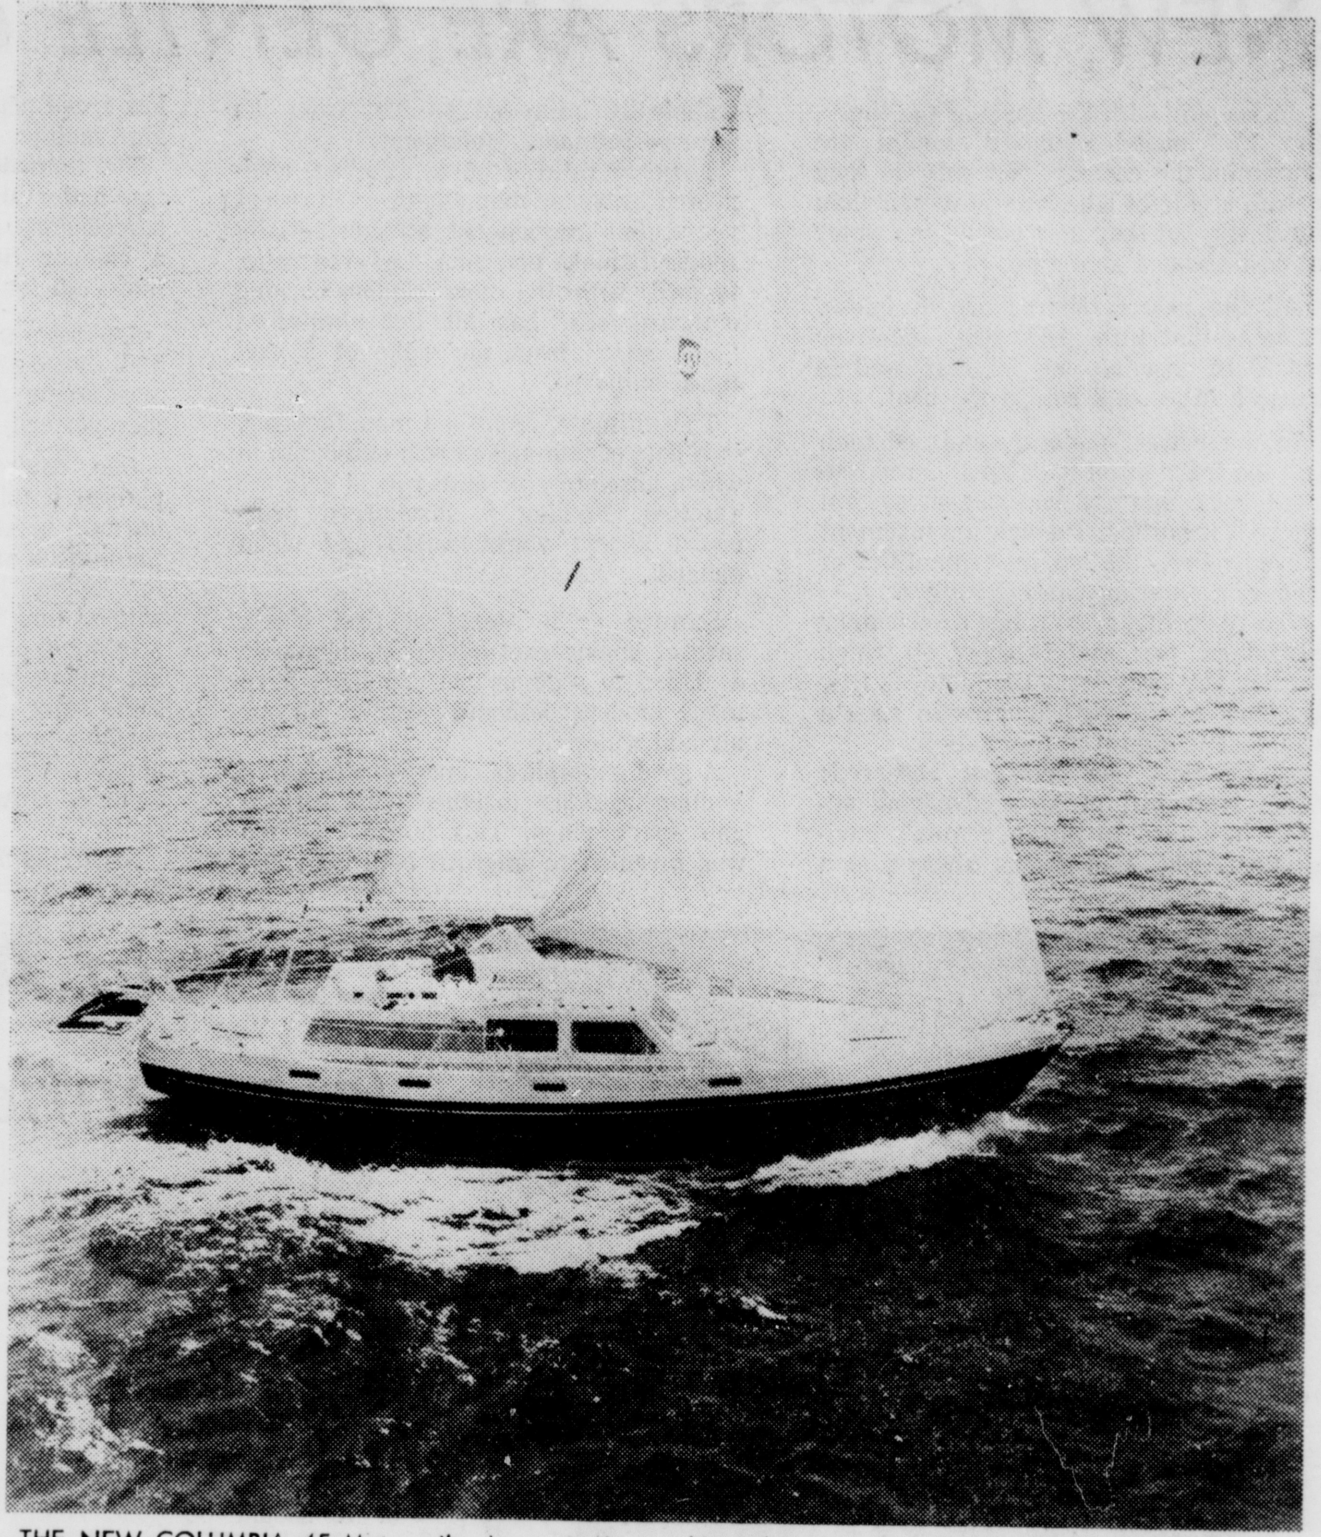
The Cape Cod Cat also is a roomy cruiser for two, boasting berths, lockers, shelves, sink and room for a head. Her base price less sails is $4,700. Inboard or outboard power may be added.

If the Cat is somewhat typical of the heavy end of the new daysailers, the AMF Alcort Hilu could be on the lighter end. She is an outrigger with a 14-foot main hull and a 10-foot float that can be mounted port or starboard. She hangs 65 square feet of sail, weighs 75 pounds and provides fun for two. Both hulls have foam flotation material, and there's a kick-up rudder for easy beaching. Her low price is $445 with sails.

Chrysler's daysailer is called Mutineer, and the builder believes she is an ideal trainer for the young sailor. A self-bailer, the 15-footer has room for four in addition to providing stowage space fore and aft. Her sail area is 145 square feet in main and jib. The latter has self-furling gear and see-through window.

She is tagged at $1,585.



THE NEW COLUMBIA 45 Motorsailor beats to the windward on San Francisco Bay. With a Perkins 4-107 diesel, she has a 1,200-mile cruising range. And spaciousness is the key to the craft with a skipper's cabin that alone measures 13 feet fore and aft. The first of the new 45-foot Motorsailors to be seen on the Bay is berthed at Clipper Yacht Harbor in Sausalito and is being offered by Sailboats/Sausalito for charter use.

NEW MOTORS ARE GENTLE ON THE ECOLOGY

In keeping with the tenor of the times, the 1972 model outboard motors are gentle on the ecology. Not only do they create less light blue haze in the air than formerly, but they now pollute the water at just about a zero rate.

All the new outboards are drainless. Gone is that little drip, drip, (however small) of gasoline and oil that used to cause a little slick behind the boat.

In the newest motors, unburned fuel, and the trace of oil it carries, is recirculated back into the combustion system where it is burned. The new arrangement prevents even the smallest quantities of fuel from entering boating waters.

The re-cycling system has a secondary advantage, too: that trace of oil which used to get away from the motor is now fed back to the rig's innards in such a way that it improves lubrication.

Noting this, one ecologist observed: "This is typical of an engineering advance designed to improve man's environment. The spin-off, as always, is a technically improved product from the pure performance standpoint."

Lowered ratio of oil to gasoline, engineered by motor manufacturers in recent years, has contributed to substantially reduced smoke emission. Lowered ratio, teamed with the new cleaner-burning outboard oils, has all but eliminated "blue haze" from the wake of a well tuned outboard.

The ultimate, from one manufacturer, is a pair of four-stoke-cycle outboards in which absolutely no oil is mixed with the gasoline. Nothing is discharged overboard except warm water and clean exhaust.

Strange as it seems at first blush, several engineering advances, primarily designed to soup up performance, have made modern outboards gentler on our air and water.

A good example is capacitor discharge ignition working together with surface gap spark plugs. This hot-shot combo was invented to improve both high and low speed performance while minimizing plug fouling.

The immediate result of its application was hotter all around performance. And a secondary, if unexpected, blessing was a cleaner running engine spawned by more efficient combustion.

Separate fuel tanks, supplied with virtually all outboards, spell convenience to most boatmen. To the ecologist, however, they portend cleaner boating water.

One environmental protectionist explained it this way: "Most oil, gas, and harmful volatiles enter boating waters at the marina or gas dock, originating with fuel spills. The old-fashioned outboard, with its tank hanging over the water, was a frequent offender. Boatmen found it all but impossible to gas it without spilling some mix in the water. The newer portable tanks, however, are filled conveniently, either inboard, on the dock, or ashore. Obviously they cause fewer spills."

As far as noise pollution is concerned, it hardly need be mentioned that the modern outboard whispers softly, where the old kicker roared with a throaty bellow.

The range of ecology-kind outboards introduced for 1972 runs from a flyweight one-lung canoe motor, up to brawny beasts boasting 140 horsepower. Interesting thing, noted by one observer with a head for figures, is that the horses get cheaper as the motors get powerful.

A quick computation shows that the 2 horsepower motors at $180 cost $90 per horse. At the upper reaches, one motor of 150 horsepower costs $1,830; and that comes to only $13 per horse. Quite an eye opener, eh? Looking at motors in the middle, a 10 horsepower rig costs $50 per horsepower; and a 40 horsepower outfit is only $19 per nag. By the time the buyer gets to 100 horsepower, he pays but $15, approximately, for each horsepower in his $1,550 outfit.

A FREQUENT CAUSE of accidents around boats is the practice of trying to step from the pier into the boat while carrying a motor or other piece of equipment. Too often the boatman winds up in the water. Place the equipment at the end of the pier. Step into the boat without it. Then pick up the equipment and put it into its place.

Certain Amount Of Savvy Is Essential For Powerboating

What would you do if your engine wouldn't start?

What's wrong if a warm engine won't get going?

What's actually happening when your boat is idling rough, and why would a motor act sluggish at full throttle?

If you don't know the answer to these questions, well, you've got some learning to do, and all of it should be done before going out with your rig again. Many boatmen are not familiar with the mechanics of an outboard, but certainly should have some basic knowledge of its actions.

JUST IN CASE you're one of those who is unsure of himself, the Evinrude News Service is prepared to give you some basic instructions to help you further understand your outboard.

For example, if your engine refuses to start, first check the fuel system. Make sure the tank isn't empty and the fuel lines aren't kinked.

Also check to see that the line is firmly connected at both ends and that it's not being pinched under a tank or at any other spot.

If a warm engine won't start, chances are it's flooded. In this case, disconnect the fuel line at the motor, advance the throttle and pull the starter rope several times. Then, after reconnecting the line, squeeze the priming bulb and try it again.

ROUGH IDLING is another common problem, but is also one which can be easily corrected. Turn the low speed carburetor setting knob slowly until the engine smooths out. Defective spark plugs and improper fuel mixtures can also cause this problem.

If the motor is sluggish at full throttle, poor spark plugs will probably be the answer. Simple inspections can be run to see if they have been fouled or burned, and if they have, the plugs should be replaced.

While the sluggish mood of the boat may be caused by the plugs, many owners have found that marine growth on the hull can also be a big factor. If you find this to be the case, pull the boat out of the water and clean it immediately. If the marine life is allowed to dry and harden, the job will be twice as hard.

ONE OTHER problem that a boatman might come across is excessive vibration while the boat is running. This is often due to a bent or broken propeller. If the prop is in good shape, check to be sure weeds haven't caught on the lower unit.

All boatmen should have, knowledge of these occurrences and know how to search for the problem. Just to play safe, however, all rigs should be brought to a local marine dealer for periodic inspections.

Inboard Power — It's Refined, Diversified And Specialized

The 1972 scope is wider, too.

The machines range from a baby one-lung sailboat auxiliary, up to a V-8 of over 500 horsepower; and the spread of diesel power is greater than ever.

EVEN MORE impressive than the sheer number of engines, is the manner in which they are adapted to specific jobs: most of the gas engines and many diesels are offered with outdrives. Many are married to V-drives, and there are some engine-jet drive combos available.

Most startling of all: the turbine engine has made its debut at the show, not just as an attention-getter, but as an honest workhorse marine engine, complete with accessories and ready to get going. Matter of fact, the turbine model in the New York show has already been applied to Chris-Craft and Pacemaker boats. Its future looks bright.

There's a pattern to the wide sweep of power on the show floor: sailboat auxiliaries from about 15 to 50 horsepower, both gas and diesel, are four cylinder mills, often having equipment making them especially suitable for sailboat service.

CONSERVATIVE "workhorse" engines from roughly 70 to 160 hp are usually straight sixes of ample displacement, moderate revolutions-per-minute, single carburetor, and accessible fittings. In this power class there are also several V-6 power plants.

Above the 175 horsepower level, the V-8 engine all but sweeps the board in the gasoline models, while diesels break up into types such as straights, V's, and horizontals; the biggest diesels even become twin-Vs.

But engineering refinements are even more apparent than diversity of models.

Many engines, including some of the diesels, have been re-vamped to offer lower profiles, allowing them to be installed in tighter quarters. Also, smaller transmissions, most of them hydraulically shifted, have been fitted to these engines to still further reduce their bulk.

AS A MATTER of fact, on most marine powerplants above about 100 horsepower, the lightweight hydraulic marine transmission has pretty much swept the board, contributing substantially to the minaturization of the pleasure-boat engine.

The turbocharger, an exhaust-gas-driven ultra-speed turbine air compressor for supercharging, is proliferating. By increasing inlet manifold pressure, the charger helps the engine breath deeply, thus it increases out-put power with little increase in overall weight.

Because they enjoy increased effective cylinder pressures, turbocharged engines can develop high horsepower at lower revolutions. Therefore, the turbine not only adds to power, but can also increase engine longevity, surprising as that may seem.

NUMEROUS other engineering advances are in store this season:

Marine alternators with capacities from 30 to 100 amperes are found in place of the older conventional generator. Small sailboat auxiliaries are offered with optional oversize alternators, making the little engine a double-duty source of power for both propulsion and electricity.

FRESH WATER cooling is standard on just about all the diesels, and is an option on most of the gas power plants.

Improved flame arrestors and dual diaphragm fuel pumps make the gaoline engines safer than ever. In this safety engineered pump, if the primary diaphragm should spring a leak, the secondary one takes over, and the operator is signaled that it's time to replace the pump. In the meantime the pump continues to function, and no gasoline drips into the crankcase or bilge.

THE PIER IS THE PLACE TO MAKE YOUR BEST APPEARANCE

HOW YOU HANDLE your boat at and around piers can make or break your reputation for boatmanship, for that is where you are most likely to have spectators observing your seamanship. An approach to the pier should always be made at slow speed, heading into the tide, current or wind. When the bow is close to the pier, toss out a line. One end of the line is secured to the bow of the boat, the other end to the pier. The driver should then shift the motor into reverse, turn it toward the pier, and back in. A stern line can then be secured to the pier. And all is taken care of, with no danger of your craft banging against the dock and sustaining damage.

A Bucket Of Cement Won't Do The Job As A Boating Anchor

It's no matter whether your boat is heavy or light, long or short or old or new — your boat needs a good anchor.

The selction of a good working anchor is a necessity for safety in boating, explains the Evinrude News Service. It's merely an old tale that a bucket filled with cement or a concrete block will do a sufficient job, simply because of their lack of holding power. On a stormy day, these homemade anchors will not keep a boat from drifting.

Instead, Evinrude recommends two types of anchors, the mushroom and the Danforth.

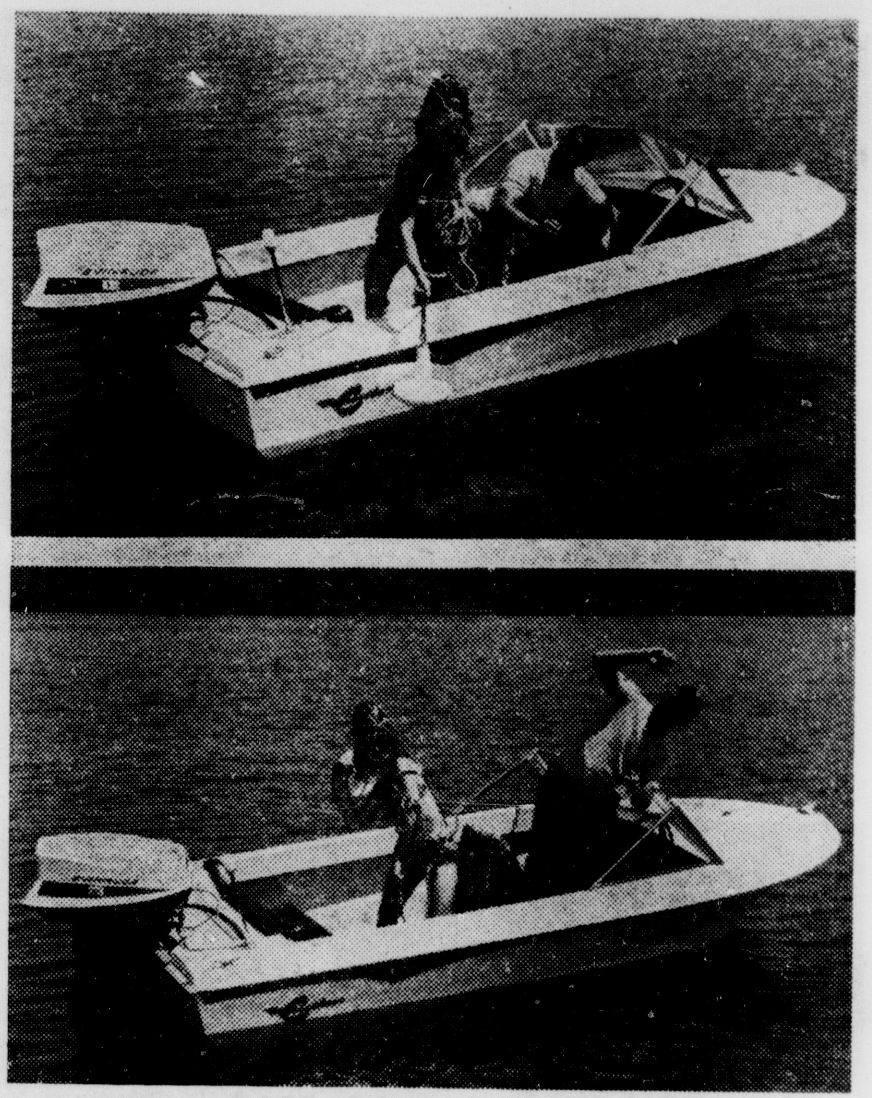
The mushroom is particularly suited for permanent mooring where there's a soft or mud bottom. The Danforth style settles quickly and has good holding power, even on hard sand or rocky bottom. A short, stockless anchor might do the job, but be sure to first check with a marine dealer for recommendations. The type of anchor you need will depend on the size of your boat and the kind of bottom you most often encounter.

Anchors are rated by "holding power," so that the heavier your boat or the rougher the water, the more holding power is required from your anchor.

Another thing to keep in mind when preparing to throw out the anchor is the safe ratio of length of anchor line to depth of water. In moderate weather, the ratio stands at six to one. If you anchor in 10 feet of water, for example, sixty feet of line is needed. On the other hand, if there is neither breeze nor current, only half of that is sufficient.

The six-to-one ratio, however, is still better for an overnight anchoring or unattended boat.

Here are just a few other important things to remember when anchoring: examine the anchor, checking that the line is secured properly; don't try to be a star shotputter with the anchor, just slowly lower it alongside the boat; have the anchor line coiled clear for running; never stand on or in the coil when letting the anchor drop.



A DUNKING IS the most probable result of careless handling of an anchor. Never try to throw or "shotput" the anchor. Instead, slowly and carefully, drop it into the water next to the boat with the line straight and free to move. Then you will be no menace to yourself, or to the others in your watercraft. The top photo is the right way, the bottom photo is the wrong way.

There's New Deal In Ship-To-Shore Radio

In accordance with Federal Communications Commission decree, the deadline for installing and licensing the old-type radio-telephones for marine communications came and passed on Dec. 31, 1971.

Now manufacturers are pushing new VHF-FM ship-to-shore and ship-to-ship units.

BUYERS WILL find the new sets lower in output power than the old ones, since the FCC limits them to 25 watts to avoid the interference that plagued the conventional channels.

Owners of the medium frequency sets, however, can continue to use them for another five years.

In the very high VHF frequencies, radio waves travel in a line of sight pattern and do not follow the curvature of the earth over the horizon. Hence, excessive power would be wasted anyway. Their frequency modulated (FM) transmission produces clear, static-free communications that will be welcomed by boatmen familiar with the snap, crackle and pop common to AM radios.

FOR THOSE who have installed VHF-FM radiotelephones and who will be cruising beyond their range — ,more than 20 miles offshore — the FCC has authorized single sideband radiotelephones. More expensive than VHF-FM, these radios can reach up to thousands of miles.

Budget shoppers can compare citizens band two-way radios.

Dry Land Start In Water Skiing —

Practice In The Living Room

Do you want to enjoy an outdoor sport that is not only challenging but also lots of fun? If you do, then water skiing is for you.

This might also explain why more than 10 million people each year participate in this easy-to-learn activity, and it can even be learned on dry land.

THE DRY LAND practice is a confidence-building technique which also tones muscles to gain skiing control.

With the help of a partner, preferably one who is an experienced skier, one can actually learn the basic anywhere, whether it be on the beach or even in someone's living room. All that's needed is a pair of skis and a tow line.

Before actual instruction begins, deep knee bends should be practiced to loosen the leg muscles and improve your sense of balance. Then, grasp the tow line and have your partner lower you to a crouched, sitting position until the tow bar is just in front of the knees.

WITH ARMS straight and elbows between the knees, your partner should pull you to a standing position. Let him do the pulling; don't try to stand up yourself. Repeat this procedure several times. This action generally simulates the pulling action of the outboard-powered boat pulling you to the water's surface.

While the legs should remain rigid enough to keep the skis parallel, maintain some flexibility with the knees bent to react to waves or turns.

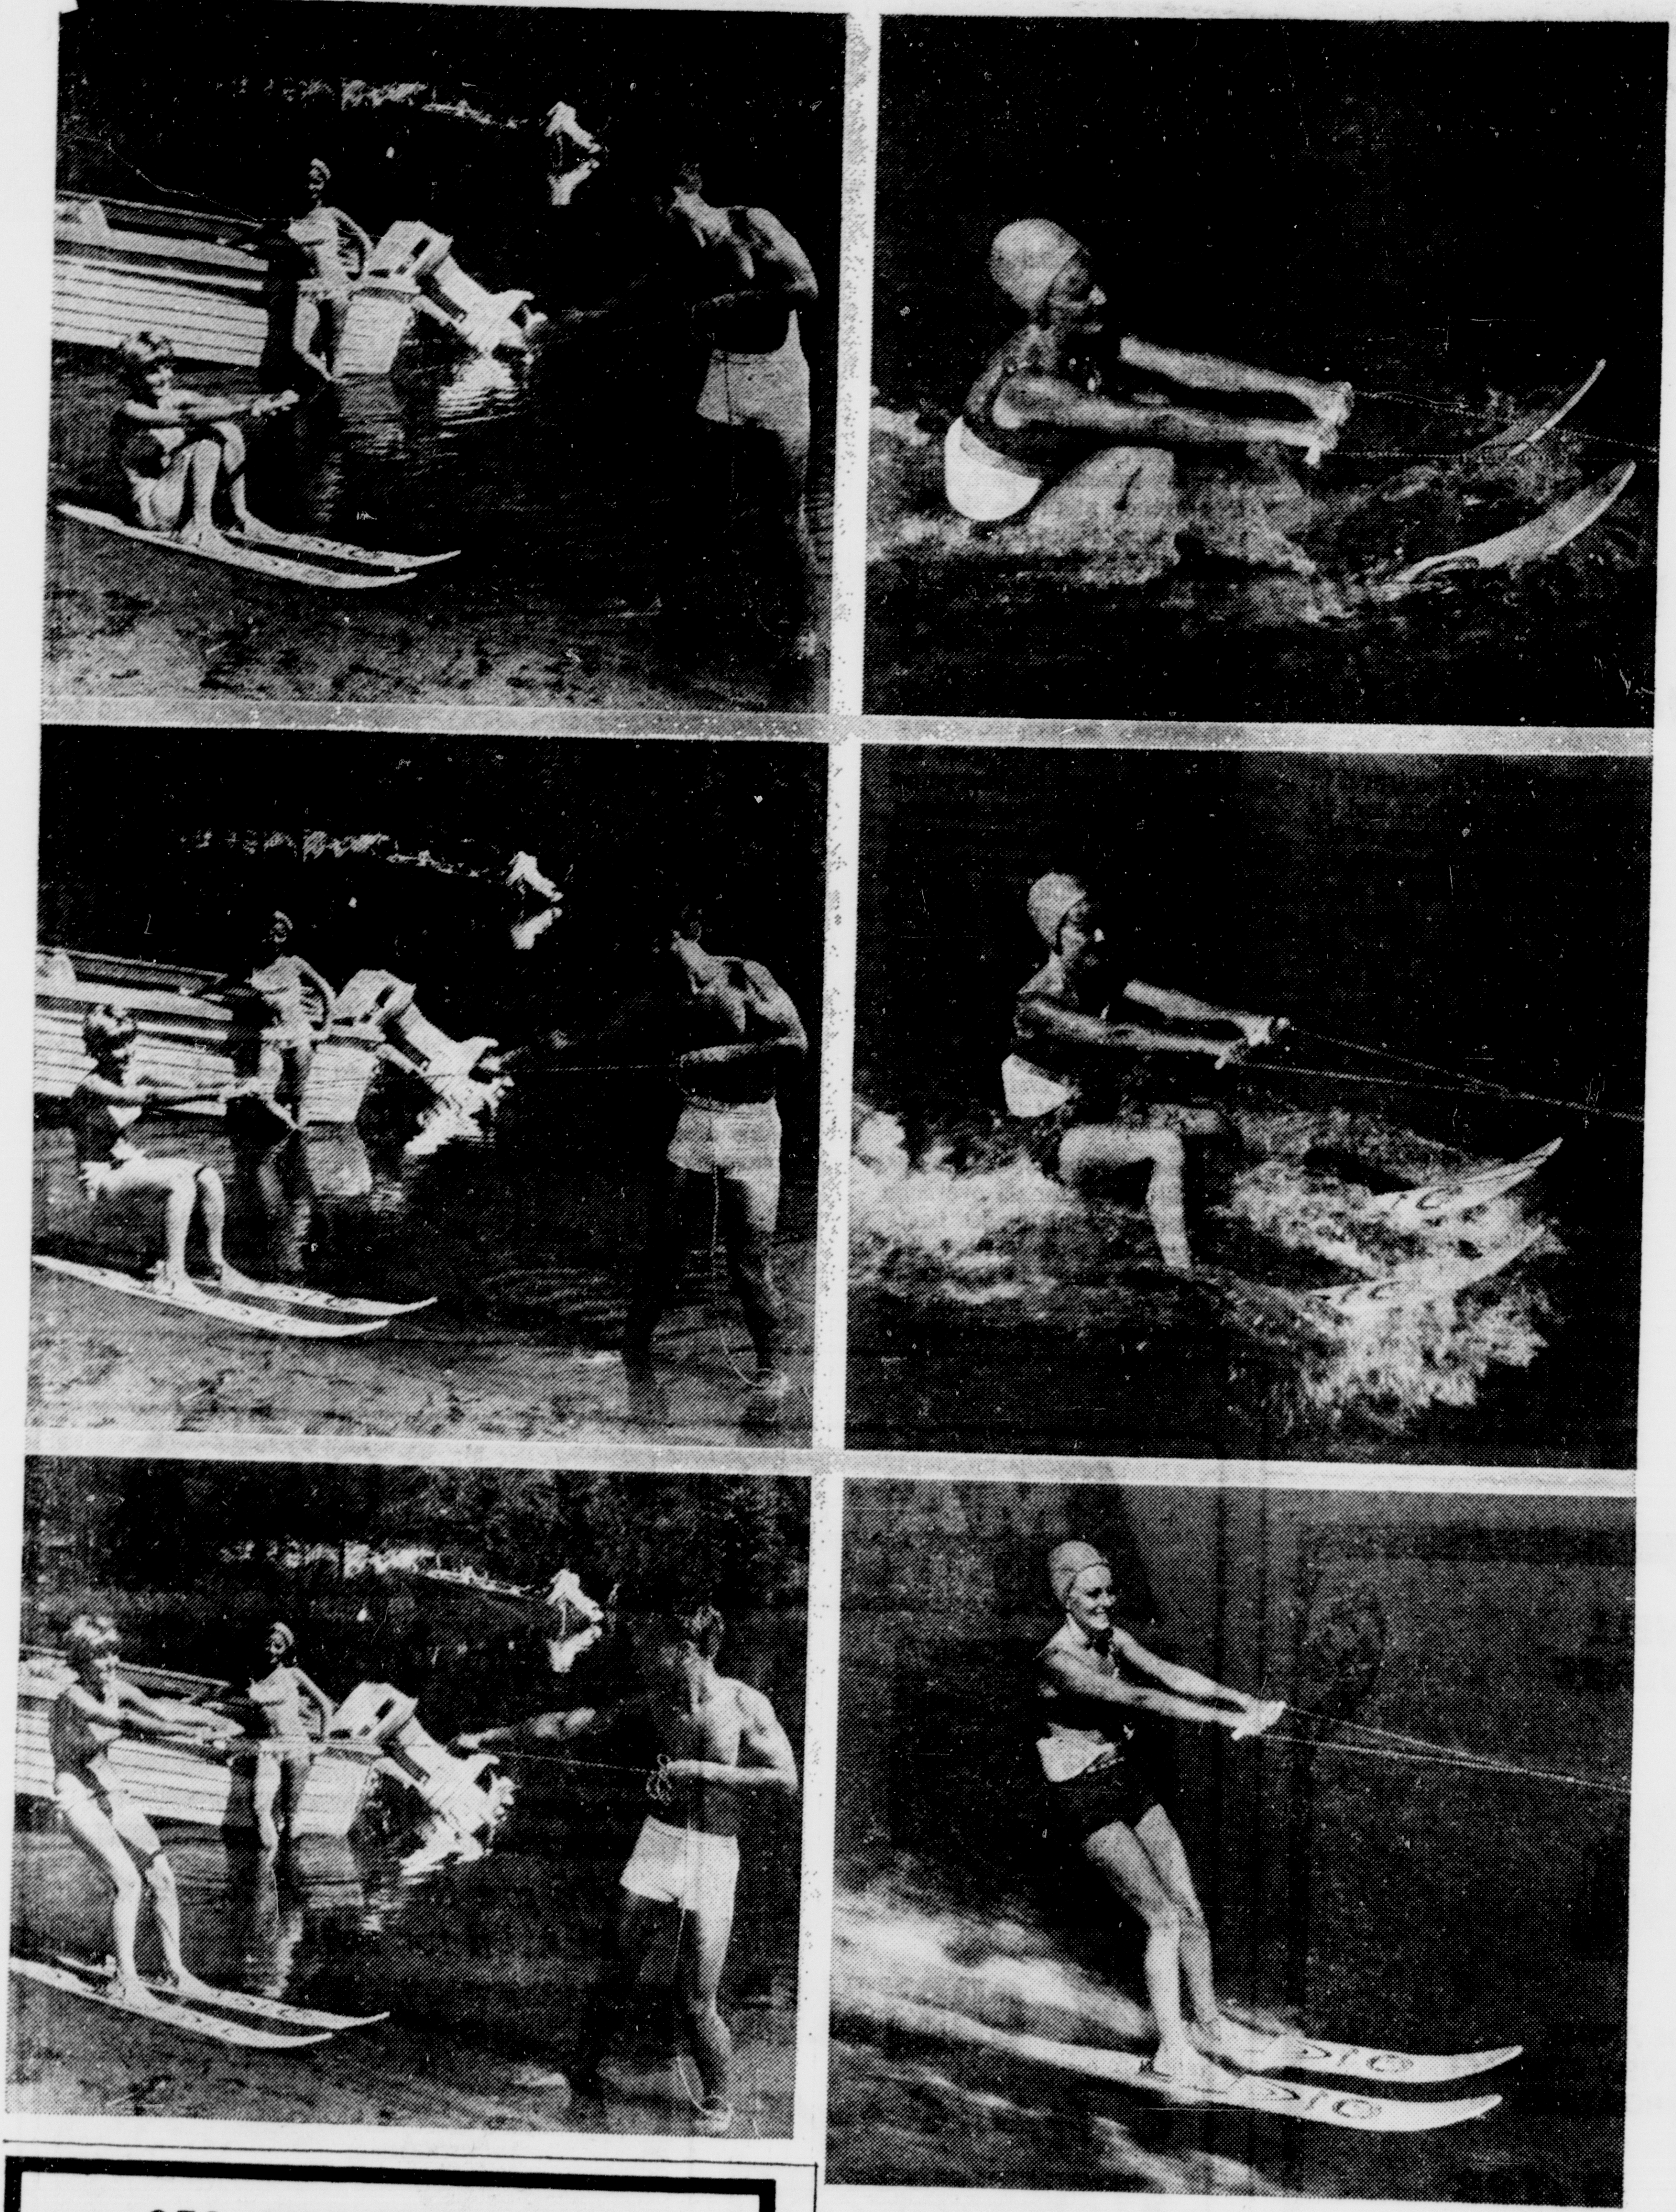
All skiers, whether they are good swimmers or not, should wear a life jacket or ski belt. Even the best of swimmers can be momentarily placed in shock by a tumble into the water.

Skis can be obtained in any price range and also from a variety of types, including conventional, slalom, trick and jumping. The length depends on the weight of the skier.

FROM THE aspect of fun and uafety, however, the teamwork between the tow boat driver and skier is most important. The driver must keep the tow line taut and know exactly how much power is needed to keep the skier on top of the water.

The addition of an observer in the boat with the driver is also important to the safety of all.

Water skiing is not only challenging and easy to learn, but is also lots of fun if the basic skills are understood and some common sense in safety is used.



THE BASICS OF water skiing can be mastered on dry land. Start by getting into a sitting position with the tow bar in front of your knees,. just as you would in the water (top photos). Then, have a friend pull you into a semi-upright position, just as the movement of the boat and the pull of the rope would do in the water (middle photos). And then come to a standing position, still allowing your friend to do all the work just as the boat would do if you were actually skiing on water (lower photos). Do not try to get up yourself. In this sequence in the three photos on the left the pulling action of the friend simulates the pulling action of the tow boat as shown in the sequence of the three photos on the right. It is even possible to practice in the living room, so that you will be that far ahead of the game once you tackle the real sport. Another advantage is that the dry land practice is a good strengthener for the very muscles you will be using the most when you actually water ski. It is an excellent method for preparing yourself so as to avoid muscular strain and soreness.

IT IS IMPORTANT always to have an observer present with the driver in the boat towing water skiers. While the driver can remain alert for obstructions or congestion ahead of his boat, the observer can keep a close watch on the skiers and relay their messages to the driver.

Close Teamwork Is Essential For Driver And Skier Safety

Evinrude Motors advises that it is just as important to have a competent driver as it is to be properly trained in the art of water skiing.

Teamwork is the determining factor in the skier's safety. The driver and skier should be able to understand each other's signals, and an observer should be in the boat to relay all messages.

THE DRIVER'S most important job is simply to remain alert at all times. During the ride, experienced skiers might execute tricks and turns, and this will cause him to miss seeing obstructions or congested areas in front of him.

The starting position is one of the most important parts of the entire ski run. As a result, the driver must be sure to have the boat positioned in such a way as to follow a straight course. This will help the skier gain his balance before having to execute a turn.

In addition, the line must be kept taut and ready for take-off until the skier gives the "hit it" signal, which means that he's ready for the ride. The driver must also be prepared for any strong winds or currents which can force the boat off the course before starting.

THE TOW BOAT driver has the responsibility of avoiding many things throughout the course of a normal ski run. He must stay away from piers, swimming beaches, shallow water and weed-choked and congested areas in order to insure the safety of the skier, as well as the safety of others.

Respect for the rights of others is a sign of a competent driver. He should give boats a wide berth and keep his distance from fishermen and skindivers.

It Requires The Proper Propeller

A correct propeller for water skiing is necessary to make the activity enjoyable and insure good tow boat performance.

Skiing demands instant thrust to pull a skier to the water's surface, and additional thrust is needed to pull as many as two or three skiers at one time.

Many standard props, however, are not designed to handle such an order, and a discussion with a marine dealer should be considered essential before finding the proper propeller.

It is also possible, however, to choose two or three props and run tests to find the one that allows the engine to turn in its rated revolutions-per-minute (rpm) range while pulling the skiers. This rpm range is usually between 4,500 and 5,500.

Checking the engine rpm with a tachometer is another manner in which to find the correct propeller to use. Your marine dealer can run this test, and can also advise you if a change is needed.

Remember that if your motor isn't giving you the kind of performance that was expected, start by checking the propeller. With medium and high horsepower engines, the change in props can make a great difference.

State Will Crack Down On Unregistered Craft

The California Department of Navigation and Ocean Development has asked all boating law enforcement agencies throughout the state to cite boats with no current registration.

John Bennett, department director, noted that several thousand boats that are required to be registered are either displaying expired decals or are not displaying numbers at all.

Bennett stated, "Registration numbers play an important role in boating safety, including search and rescue, theft prevention and craft identification. A properly displayed number with a current registration sticker is added protection to the boatman in trouble."

Registration fees are used to build boating facilities and finance boating safety and enforcement activities throughout the state.

The department advises all boatmen to check their boats for proper number display and stickers. Boatmen who have failed to register their craft are urged to do so at their local Department of Motor Vehicles Office to avoid an embarrassing and perhaps costly boarding this summer.

GADGETS PLENTY PLEASE BOATMEN

Most men like gadgets and the boat accessory manufacturers are more than happy to supply boatmen with every conceivable electronic device possible.

Here's a list, from the Outboard Boating Club of America, of some of the equipment available to the boater:

Depth sounder: This instrument gauges the distance between the boat and any destruction to the water's bottom, a wreck or school of fish. This enables the fisherman to know just how far to drop his line. Selecting the right device depends on the depths of waters to be used, the size of the boat and budget and how you plan to use it. Prices start at $85 for a flasher which measures up to 100 feet to $1,000 for a recorder which features variable speed charts.

Intercom: Even if you don't have one in your home, you can get one aboard your boat. You can get these as low as $100 for intercom, hailer, microphone, speaker and all the necessary hardware for installation.

Marine alarms: Different units warn of engine over-heating, low oil pressure, gas fumes, bilge flooding, etc. Prices vary according to the "sense" wanted.

Radio-Telephone: A unit for everyone. Some units include full service communications, such as megaphone, intercom, foghorn, and alarm as well as all transistor radio receiver. Or you can get VHF radiotelephones operated on 25-watt power; or a three-band radio for tuning in weather reports.

Depth trollers: For those fishermen who don't want to sit and wait for the fish to bite, this device lets you move bait to where they're "biting good."

Barometer: Measures the pressure exerted by the atmosphere — it gives the weather conditions. An aneroid barometer can be as small as a pocket watch, but for ease of reading and greater accuracy, something the size of a clock is better for the boatman. You don't have to spend vast sums of money to get adequate precision —pay what you would for a reliable clock.

Radar: Some units are as small as a breadbox, but costs are a bit high. Radar is almost a necessity on larger boats at night or in fog.

All these don't include the normal range of gadgets boatmen want, such as tachometer, speedometer, fuel gauge, foghorn, etc.

If you have lots of money, there's no limit to how many instruments you can get.

Don't Rush Into Project Of Building Your Boat

Some want to own a "different" boat, one uniquely adapted to special purposes. Some hope to wind up with a larger craft than they could otherwise afford. Others do it as an absorbing hobby and for the sense of accomplishment.

Whatever your reason, say the boating experts at Mercury outboards, you should realize that building a boat can be quite a task. Don't rush into it without thinking it over. You need good tools and a comfortable work place.

A good level of manual skill and a knack for understanding mechanical drawings are necessary for more ambitious projects.

IF YOUR objective is to save money, look before you leap. Modern mass boat production makes use of elaborate machinery and material is purchased by the carload. If you build a boat, you'll pay retail prices for wood, hardware and paint — and it can add up.

A small pram can contain $75 worth of material bought at retail. You can buy an aluminum john boat for about the same price.

Before deciding to build, shop the used boat market. You might find a suitable used craft that needs reconditioning, which you can buy and fix up with less expenditure of time, sweat and money. Its resale value could be higher, too.

IF YOUR plans do list materials, visit lumber and hardware outlets to get prices and an idea of what the boat might cost. Allow for breakage, reworking and incidentals when figuring out the total.

Kit boats are not nearly as common as they once were. Kits enjoyed a spurt of popularity some years ago when the boating boom began and there were not as many boat dealers. Today mass-produced boats are so widely available and on time payment plans that the market for kits has dwindled.

Northern California Guide On Where You Can Canoe

"Canoeing Waters of Northern California" is a looseleaf booklet written by Ann Dwyer of Kentfield for Marin Canoe Club members and for others interested in the sport and looking for waters upon which to enjoy it.

It is available at some bookstores, or can be ordered for $3.50 from Canoes West, Post Office Box 61, Kentfield, Calif.

Mrs. Dwyer received her Red Cross canoe instructor certificate in 1962 and has taught canoeing continuously since then. She and Gwen Kleeman launched Canoes West in 1971 as a firm selling canoes, kayaks, rubber rafts and the equipment and gear needed for those sports.

"Canoeing Waters of Northern California," she says, is intended primarily for beginners, and thus most of the waters listed are "fairly easy." Later, she says, more difficult waters will be added. And she hopes the book will eventually be published in regular hardcover format.

Of the book in its present form, the Pacific Paddler, edited by Ann Schafer of Woodland Hills, for California canoeists, said: "No Pacific Division member should be without a copy."

Average Age

Canoe Trails Charted

A new book, "Makens Guide to U.S. Canoe Trails," is available to outdoors enthusiasts interested in exploring new rivers and streams in various parts of the country.

Billed as the most complete compilation yet assembled, the book is intended by its author, James C. Makens of the University of Dallas in Irving, Tex., to show that there are good canoeing rivers in most every section of the country. In all, the guide lists thousands of miles of canoe trails, on some 900 rivers in 49 states.

For most of the rivers, the 86-page booklet details launching and take-out sites, gives difficulty ratings and describes rough-water areas at various levels, and outlines points of special interest along the trails.

The trail directory, in a convenient glove-compartment size, is available through many bookstores and Grumman dealers, or direct from the publisher, LeVoyageur Publishing Co., 1319 Wentwood Drive, Irving, Tex., 75060, at $4.95.

Boat Trailering Made Safe, Easy

WITH A little practice, the launching of a boat can become a simple project. But be sure to have at least one — preferable two — people to help the driver as he backs the trailer into the water. One of the aides can be used as a guide. The other can hold the lead line from the bow, thus making sure that the boat doesn't drift away after hitting the water. That is a frequent mishap in one-man launchings.

Practice, a professionally-built trailer and a little know-how is all it takes to trailer your boat to better and bigger waters.

Before starting out on any trip, check your boat and trailer. Know what your car and trailer can do. If you don't have an owner's manual, ask your dealer. You may need special equipment for your car, such as heavy-duty shock absorbers and rear view mirrors.

THE CAR'S trailer hitch is important. You should have a hitch rated to carry the kind of load to be pulled. Wheel bearings should be well lubricated. Load capacities prescribed by the trailer manufacturer should be strictly followed.

The boat should also be positioned properly or the boat will sway while being towed and you may damage the hull. Do not trail the boat with the outboard motor in a down position. Be sure the tie-downs are taut and locked.

Anchors, chains, trailer jack and tool kits should not be kept aboard the boat while towing — the car trunk is a far better storage place. If it is necessary to carry such equipment in the boat, be sure they are secured so they won't move about.

DRIVING IS most important if you expect to get to your destination. You'll need more room to turn because the trailer tracks inside the car on a curve and it takes more room and power to pass. You should drive a little slower than you normally would and try braking a few times at various speeds to see how much distance it takes you to stop.

And it's a good idea to stop every so often (possibly every hour) to inspect your rig to be sure everything is safe and secure.

Launching a boat from a trailer usually is a two-person job, with one person acting as a guide for the driver. The helper can watch the rear of the trailer as the driver backs up and call out instructions to line up at the right angle to the shore.

Remove the rear tie-downs when a few feet from the edge of the water.

Next, be sure the motor is tilted up and unlock the bow winch but keep the boat snubbed right. If your trailer is the tilt-bed type, release tilting mechanism (but don't tilt the trailer bed until you're ready to slide the boat into the water).

Back up until the trailer wheels are in the water an inch or two, set your hand brake and put the car in gear. Give the boat a firm push down the trailer.

Unfasten the launching line or cable and reel it in — but be sure to keep the boat from drifting by holding a line attached to the bow. Pull the empty trailer up to a sheltered spot, park the car and you're ready to go.

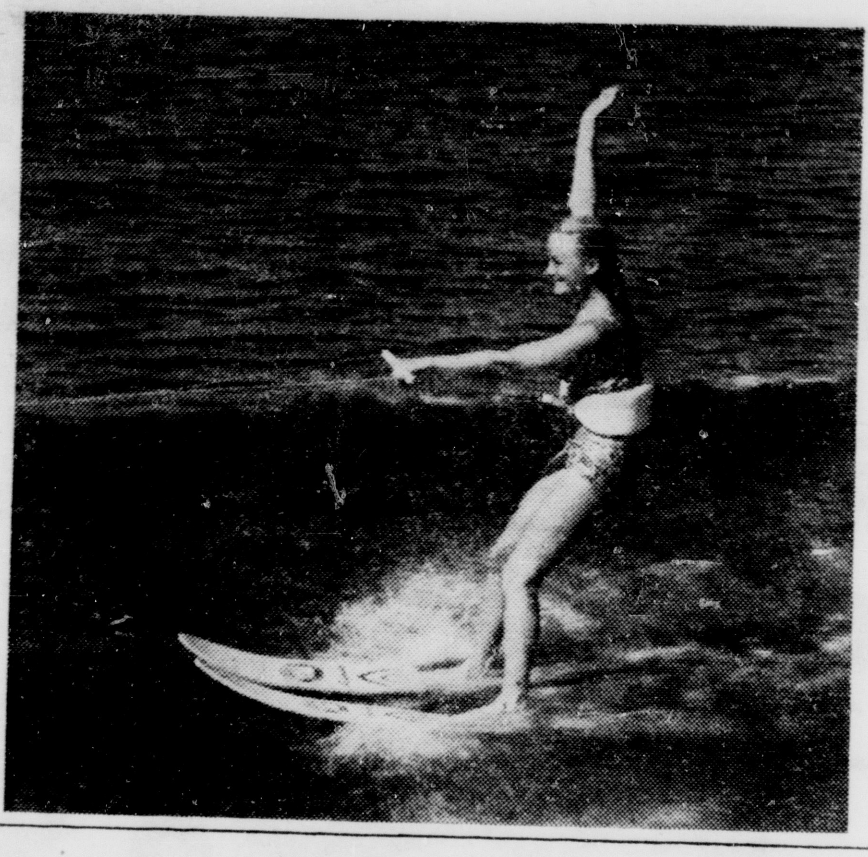
A PHOTO record of the good times they have enjoyed together on the water is something that all members of the family will treasure for many, many years. But there are certain tricks to good photography taken on the water. You don't just go out and start snapping the shutter. Once those special techniques have been mastered, then your photos can capture the excitement and the fun that is distinctive of boating, water skiing, swimming and all the other water pleasures.



USE YOUR CAMERA

Keep A Record Of Boating Season

Another boating season is here and one way to keep it from becoming just a blurred memory is to record it on film —from start to finish.

The best opening scenes are those fitting-out chores —sandpapering, painting, etc. — then the launch, and from there the possibilities are unlimited.

Many persons prefer movies but boating is one place where still pictures or color slides, especially when taken in sequence, can do almost as good a job of picturing action as movies, simply because boating action is rarely continuous.

An adjustable camera that can be set for action-stopping fast shutter speeds is an asset. Stopping the action overcomes — at least partially — one of the difficulties of boating photography, camera movement resulting from the pitch and roll of the boat.

More expensive cameras are designed to set the correct lens opening automatically. Without this type of camera, a light meter to measure the intensity of the sunlight is a big help.

In addition to providing pictures of the boat, its occupants and memorable cruises that will be enjoyed for years to come, there are other instances where a camera might prove helpful. Here are a few of them:

Help teach beginners boatmanship and improve the boatman's own techniques, especially where it involves sailboat racing.

Improve the performance of the boat.

Save time as well as money in substantiating losses for income tax purposes and insurance claims, facilitate recovery of stolen articles, and minimize possibilities of lengthy, expensive legal action.

For example, the Internal Revenue Service accepts photographic evidence to substantiate losses due to fire, theft, hurricane, etc. It also allows a reasonable cost for taking the supporting photographs as part of a justifiable claim.

Closeup pictures of valuable equipment such as compass radio, depth finder, help police track them down if they are stolen. On the back of each picture should be noted the date purchased and where, serial number and price.

Pictures also can help provide evidence in court actions that might result from an accident, such as a collision with another boat.

One thing to remember. No one has to be a technical wizard to be assured of good picture results with today's new cameras. They do practically everything automatically except point the lens.

Billion In Taxes

The tax on motorboat fuel accounted for 26 million of the 356 million dollars total placed in the Federal Land and Water Recreation Fund during fiscal 1971, according to the Boating Industry Associations. Since the fund's inception in 1965, nearly a billion dollars has been distributed for acquisition and maintenance of outdoor recreation equipment.

It's Easy To Catch Sailing Fever

But watch it — you might get hooked on this growing sport and buy a boat yourself. You'll join the estimated 643,000 other people who sail.

All sailboats have four basic parts in common — the hull, sails, centerboard (keel) and rudder. Sailboat hulls are designed differently than motorboat hulls. They're designed to slip through the water and to resist the tipping effect of the wind, rather than to skim over the surface as a motorboat does.

THE SAIL, of course, catches the wind to move the boat. To prevent the boat from sliding sideways, all boats need a centerboard or keel which also acts as a pivot when turning the boat. And the rudder steers the boat, often with a tiller.

There's a sailboat model to fit every purse and a sailing board or dinghy is perfect for the beginning sailor. Sailboat lengths range from 8 feet to 50 feet. You can buy an eight-foot model to hold one or two people often for less than $500. Larger craft can cost $1,000 per foot!

Daysailers are relatively simple to set up — most models have only one sail (the mainsail), no winches and the rudder might even be removeable.

SCHEDULED FOR early 1972 delivery is this new sailing craft from Fold-A-Bout of 100 Hegenberger Road, Oakland. It is being built in 12 and 14-foot lengths, constructed of marine aluminum. Its makers say it is the first folding sailboat to be constructed of that material.

These boats are lightweight and portable (some can easily be lifted atop a car by one person). Models are also built for easy righting if capsized.

DIAGRAMS, step-by-step procedures and photos in "how-to" books will provide the novice sailor with the basics before he tries the boat in the water. Also, before venturing out, the boating rules of the road should be learned. A life jacket should be donned for the initial ventures.

After learning to rig your boat, learn to handle your boat in relation to the wind. This does take some practice. However, there are rewards — when you've learned how to sail with the wind (running), against the wind (tacking), and across the wind (reaching), you can graduate to a larger boat or a bigger body of water.

A 16-foot sloop can comfortably seat a family of four for a day of sailing. Or if you plan to weekend cruise, you can buy a sailboat with cabin, galley and head. Running lights are Coast Guard requirements for any night-time nagivation.

BOATING IN 1971 — SOME STATISTICS

Here are some U.S. boating statistical highlights from 1971:

Boat Speedometers Have Their Quirks

Nevertheless, some instrument knowledge is useful to any boater. Being mechanical devices, instruments cannot think for themselves. They obey the laws of physics.

Sometimes things happen that make it seem as if instruments are wrong. Usually it turns out to be something that is happening outside the instrument itself that is causing an erroneous reading.

Boat speedometers are a good example, say the boating experts at Mercury outboards. If you're a good swimmer and have done some diving, you're aware of how water pressure increases the deeper you go.

WHEN A BOAT is launched, its speedometer pressure pickup tube is placed several inches below the water's surface. Slight pressure is built up in the flexible line that connects the tube to the speedometer. A good speedometer is sensitive enough for even this slight amount of pressure to affect it, and so it may read two or three miles an hour the moment the boat is launched.

Good boat speedometer installations include a "bleeder valve" which can be opened momentarily after launching to release unwanted pressure from the line and make the needle go back to zero.

At lower speeds, water flows around a boat differently than it does at high speed. Sometimes this affects water pressure in the vicinity of the pick-up tube so thataccuracy is affected. At speeds under 10 miles an hour even a quality speedometer can be thrown slightly off for this reason.

A HULL'S KEEL strips and the motor's lower unit disturb the water and push it aside at higher speeds. If a pick-up tube happens to be located on the transom where it can "feel" some of this pressure, again its accuracy may be affected.

Install your pickup tube according to directions which come with the instrument.

Expectsome time-lag between opening the throttle and achieving full and steady reading on the speedometer. Because of propeller slippage, boat acceleration lags slightly behind motor acceleration.

Water Craft Total Hits 5,380 Mark

By WAT TAKESHITA

Recreational boating is rapidly becoming the nation's top family sport, and Marin is no exception.

Because the county is surrounded by water, and dotted with inlets and coves that are conducive to recreational boating, the percentage of Marin residents who will head for the water to sail, cruise, ski and fish at every opportunity probably ranks among the highest in the nation.

During this 1971-72 fiscal year, the office of Marin County Assessor Bert Broemmel estimates that the county has 5,380 pleasure boats of all kinds, (not including boats in the inventory of dealers) with a market value of $17,445,000. During the 1970-71 fiscal year, Marin had an estimated 5,213 boats valued at $15,781,900.

BOAT OWNERSHIP in Marin runs about one craft per 12 households.

Assistant Assessor Herschel Johnson said that the number of boats has risen steadily during the past 10 years but comparable figures are not available because houseboats and store inventory were lumped together with privately owned pleasurecraft a decade ago.

County records show that in 1962-63 there were 5,291 boats in Marin County with a total market value of $12,470,130. These figures included both houseboats and dealer inventory.

Marin boat dealers and marine suppliers foresee a boom in sales this year because of the mild weather and the general uptrend in economic conditions.

Their annual year-end report says that boats and motors sold in 1971 tended to be bigger than ever. The average length of outboard boats sold during the year was 15.6 feet compared with 15.4 feet the previous year. Outboard motors sold in 1971 averaged 35.6 horsepower, compared with 31 horsepower in 1970.

Other figures compiled in the year-end report show that an estimated 44,905,000 Americans went boating more than once or twice during 1971. The nation's recreational fleet is pegged at $8,981,000 boats of all types, more than double the total of 20 years ago.

OUTBOARD BOATS total 5,315,000, followed by rowboats, canoes and dinghies estimated at 2,384,000. Sailboats and inboard boats (including sailboats with auxiliary power) are about even. The national estimate is 639,000 inboard boats as compared with 643,000 sailboats.

For Marin residents already signed up or planning to enlist in the pleasure boating navy, these pages offer a complete, up-to-date directory of essential yachting supplies and services.

Upkeep— Make It A Habit

You finally did it! You gave in to that impulse and bought a boat. There it sits in all its gleaming, pristine newness. The brightwork glistens, and the motor is tuned to perfection.

That's the joy of a new boat . . . everything works.

Want to keep it that way? It's easy if you use common sense and spend a litle time and effort on it. The Marine Service Committee of the National Assn. of Engine and Boat Manufacturers, has come up with some observations and recommendations for novice and seasoned sailor alike.

FIRST, AND most important, don't let the work pile up. It's awfully easy to come in off a day on the water and say that you'll clean the boat up tomorrow, because you're too tired to do it right away. But the next thing you know it's two weeks later, you decide to go boating and your boat's still a mess from last time. If you take a few minutes at the end of the day to wash her down, flush the engine, and put everything ship-shape, you'll be ready the next time you go out in spite of unexpected relatives.

The secret of keeping a boat in proud condition is to treat it like a member of the family. Be kind to it and attend to its needs. If it's dirty, wash it up. If it gets sick, see a specialist right away. When you leave it alone for awhile, make sure it's well attended and in good condition. Boats seems to have definite personalities, and if you treat them nicely, they'll treat you well in return.

There's really nothing sadder than to see a once proud craft, neglected and dispirited, falling apart and broken.

BOAT MAINTENANCE need not be costly, but if you let things go, one problem compounds another until you may be faced with major repairs. Modern materials have substantially reduced the need for repeated scraping and painting, and marine engines operate reliably with very little care. But some upkeep will be necessary to keep everything operating perfectly and looking new.

It's a good family pastime, working on your boat. The children, according to age and ability, can be assigned various tasks for which they will be responsible. Since a boat is a fun, family thing, the kids will take pride in doing their part. Unless you are a competent mechanic, though, leave the engine work for the professionals.

In short, your boat will be as welcome or as bothersome as you permit it to be. But you'll find that you can keep it looking like new with an amazingly small amount of effort. This will pay off in many more enjoyable hours afloat. It'll pay off at resale time, too.

KNOW YOUR 'RULES OF THE ROAD'

"Rules of the road" pertain to boating as well as to driving a car. Remember AND follow these rules, says the Outboard Boating Club of America.

—Rowboats, sailboats and other unpowered craft almost always have the right of way over powerboats. The only exception is when an unpowered craft is overtaking or passing a motorboat.

—When approaching another powerboat at an angle, the boat on the right has the right of way.

—When meeting another boat head-on, or nearly so, swing to the right. Keep to the right in narrow channels, too.

—When overtaking and passing another boat, the boat being overtaken has the right of way.

Never ride parallel to another boat's wake. It will tend to throw your boat from side to side and may cause a capsize. While this is not a legal requirement, it is good seamanship.

Unless you have a boat large enough, and that means over 14 feet, don't allow passengers to stand up or change seats while you're underway. However, if you have to, stop the boat and instruct passengers to keep low and in the center of the boat and to hold on to the gunwales to steady themselves.

When anchoring, ease the anchor overboard and let the line out gradually until it hits bottom. When you weigh anchor, pull the line in slowly to avoid tipping the boat dangerously.

Check the weather before you get undr way. If the sky looks threatening, don't go out. However, if you're out and do get caught in a bad storm, have your passengers don life jackets and sit on the boat. Also, keep the bow headed at an angle into the waves. Don't try to cross a large body of water in a storm; keep as close to the shore as possible.

Outdoor Boating Club publishes a Rules of the Road poster which is available for the asking. Write OBC, 401 North Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill., 60611.

A Recommended Gas-Oil Ratio

While all boatmen should follow directions given in their owner's manual for the proper oil-gasoline mixture, Evinrude recommends a 50-to-one gas-to-oil ratio, meaning one pint of oil to every six gallons of gasoline. Regular automotive or white marine gasoline should always be used.

The company even calls its own outboard motor oil "Evinrude 50 to 1."

Although special outboard oils are usually high priced, you Lcan actually save money, according to the Evinrude News Service. In most cases it is necessary to use less oil with the new blends. They're designed to cut the gas-to-oil ratio in half.

Always remember that when filling an empty tank, it is wise to pour in only a little gas and oil at a time. First add a couple of gallons of gasoline, and then add the oil and mix well before filling the tank completely. Make sure the filler cap is properly secured.

It is advisable to also measure the oil carefully. Too much oil may cause smoking or plug fouling, and yet too little oil can result in improper lubrication. Again, the owner's manual will give the proper amounts for break-in and later running.

An extremely important point to remember is that when filling outboard fuel tanks, remove the portable tank from the boat and fill it on the gasoline pier. Because gas and its fumes are highly combustible, take no chances on spilling any gas in the boat.

Be sure to wipe any spilled gasoline off the side of the tank before taking it back on board. Naturally, extinguish all cigarettes, cigars and pipes while fueling, and prevent the possibility of a static spark by keeping the fuel nozzle in contact with the tank.

Tip To Lengthen Life Of Motor

Tip to outboard motor owners: An easy way to insure a longer life for your motor is to run the engine dry after each use. Simply disconnect the fuel line from the motor and run the engine until it cuts out. The procedure gets rid of fuel that might produce gummy deposits if left in the engine.

Look For The Fish Where The Sunlight Isn't Striking

Sun glasses may bring comfort to fishermen on bright days, but what can fish do about brilliant light?

Unlike mammals and birds, fish lack eyelids to close, and they certainly don't have sun glasses. Nor can they contract or expand the irises of their eyes to compensate for light conditions.

The fact that fish usually prefer shade is an indication that direct sunlight bothers them. This helps explain why during summer, when the sun's rays strike water at a more direct angle, the best fishing usually occurs in early morning, late evenings, or at night.

Studies by fishing experts at Mercury outboards indicate there is a relationship between the amount of sunlight penetrating the water, and the way fish behave. By understanding how fish react to sunlight, anglers can change their methods to suit conditions and have more success.

Early in the year fish seek shade under docks, bridges, overhanging banks, around large rocks and in similar places, all generally in shallow water. As a lake's water warms fish will move deeper where sunlight is diffused. How far down depends in part upon oxygen content. Remember that bass school in deep holes during the hottest part of day in summer.

Another factor the Mercury fishing department found important in selecting where to fish on bright days is the wind. Wave-chopped water breaks up the sun's penetration, scattering and diffusing the brilliant light. Fish, even minnows, choose times such as this to come nearer the surface. Cloudy, windy summer days are often good times to fish in shallow water.

Remember that when you seek relief from the sun, fish are probably doing the same thing. Look for them where the sun's light can't reach.

Power Boat Course Is Streamlined

The man behind the United States Power Squadrons' new streamlined boating education course is hopeful it will go a long way toward changing some recent U.S. Coast Guard statistics — that only one out of every four boat operators has ever had any boating safety training.

He is Walter R. Cosdon of Burbank, Calif., new chief commander of the USPS, whose 407 squadrons stretch from Boston to Okinawa and boast a membership of close to 83,000 recreational boatmen.

As chief commander of the 58-year-old nonprofit, non-government USPS, it is one of Cosdon's many chores to see that the organization's new free-of-charge instruction course in safety afloat attracts as many beginning boatmen as possible.

The basic course was revised recently to put more emphasis on outboard boating and trailering and to reach the growing number of boatmen who operate on inland rivers and lakes.

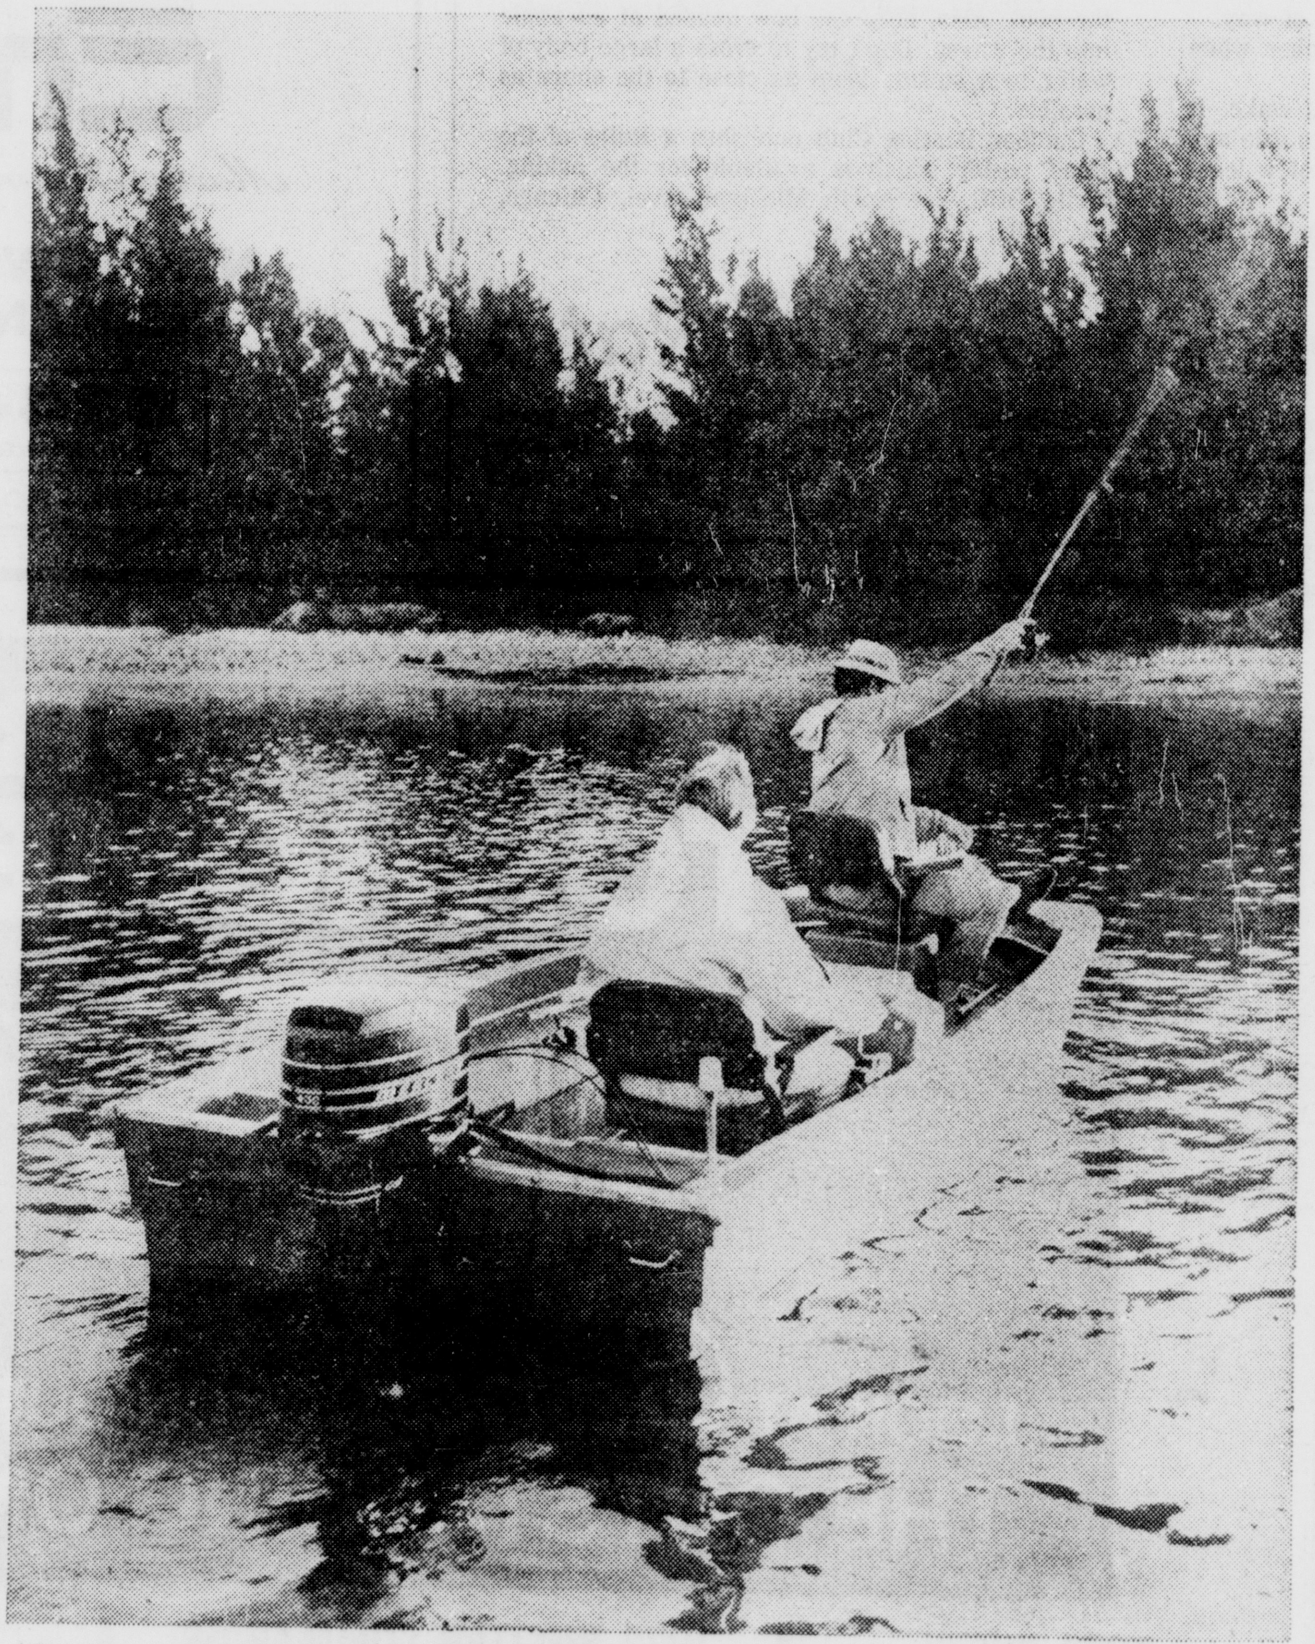
"We even changed the name from 'Piloting Course' to 'Boating Course,'" Cosdon said.

"We felt that the word piloting was a little misleading. People didn't know whether it was for airplanes, or what."

Cosdon said there were too many things in the previous course that were of little interest to many neophyte boatmen.

"We streamlined our course considerably," he said. "We took out a lot of extraneous matter — chart plotting, compass work, things like that — to bring it down to the basic fundamentals which fit any type of boater.

"In other words, it's an all-purpose program and then to that we have added material for boat trailering, including even care and use of the trailer itself."



THE NEWEST THING in fishing boats is a model commonly referred to as a "bass boat." The two swivel seats provide plenty of room for anglers and the low freeboard makes it easy to boat the catch, be it bass or some other species. Surveys show that fishing is a prime reason for the acquisition of boats, and a sport in which the entire family often participates with relaxing effects.

Family Fun Of Fishing

Fishing is great family fun.

Everyone, from adult to the smallest youngster who can hold a rod or cane pole, can get in on the action and enjoy wholesome outdoor sport. And children, esepcially, like to fish for this is one form of recreation where they can be individuals, participating on the same level as adults.

But hat about the family that hasn't yet discovered the enjoyment angling offers? How can they learn about fishing, and the types of equipment best suited to their desires?

TO BEGIN, IT'S best to obtain some help. This can be from a friend who fishes, or it can be in the form of books, fishing interest magazines, and pamphlets available from fishing tackle manufacturers. Most established firms publish materials to aid the novice angler; simply write and ask for help.

The next step is to go fishing, and the Mercury outboard angling experts suggest that careful consideration be given to this important move. If you choose a place and time when fishing is poor, it's possible to end the family's interest at once. Uncomfortable weather and insects that get more bites than you do spoil the fun.

Plan the first fishing trip for a time when prospects are good (ask local anglers) and the weather is agreeable.

OBTAIN SIMPLE fishing tackle initially, and learn what types of gear you like the best. With experience you'll find that one or two methods of angling suit you best, and then is the time to buy quality tackle.

Vary your family's fishing experiences. Visit lakes and streams; try fly fishing, bait casting and spinning. Experiment with other methods such as limb-lining and trot lines. Seine some bait and spend a night angling for catfish.

A good way to keep fishing interest high during winter is to make your own lures and rods. Kits are available from a number of sources, and this is an excellent way to add to your knowledge of the sport.

Grease The Channels

If you must dip the back end of your trailer in salt water when launching your boat, coat the channels with a light grease.

It's Insurance Review Time

Fitting out time for pleasure boat owners is here, making it an appropriate time to review insurance policies, especially if any changes have been made in a boat, its equipment or the way in which it will be operated.

This advice comes from Robert Lowry, manager of the Hull and Liability Department of Marine Office-Appleton & Cox Corp., who notes that only about one boat owner in 10 takes the trouble to update his policy.

"The nine who don't," he says, "may later regret the oversight."

Many owners, he says, acquire expensive equipment during the winter —depth finders, ship-to-shore radios, direction finders, etc. — install it on their boat in the spring but make no adjustments in the policies to cover the new equipment.

"They stand the risk of being out-of-pocket should their boat become a total or constructive total loss," he said.

Lowry also suggests that boat owners review their liability coverage.

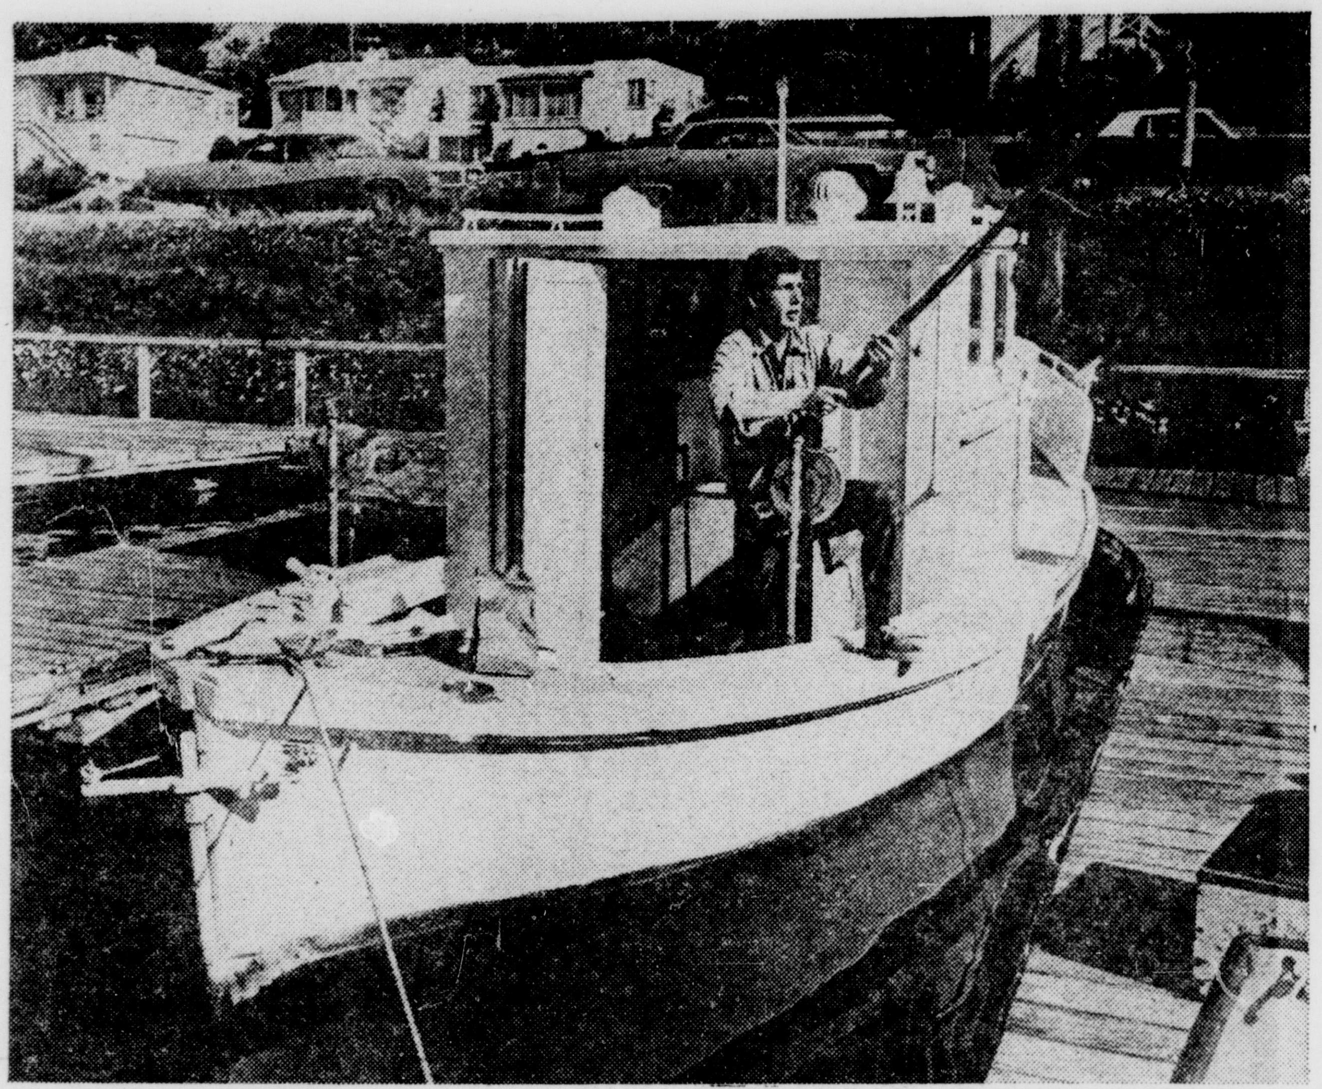
GETTING READY

With the official opening of the 1972 yachting season on San Francisco Bay getting ever nearer, Independent-Journal photographer Jim Kean took his cameras out on a Saturday to explore the Marin shoreline to record the preparations.

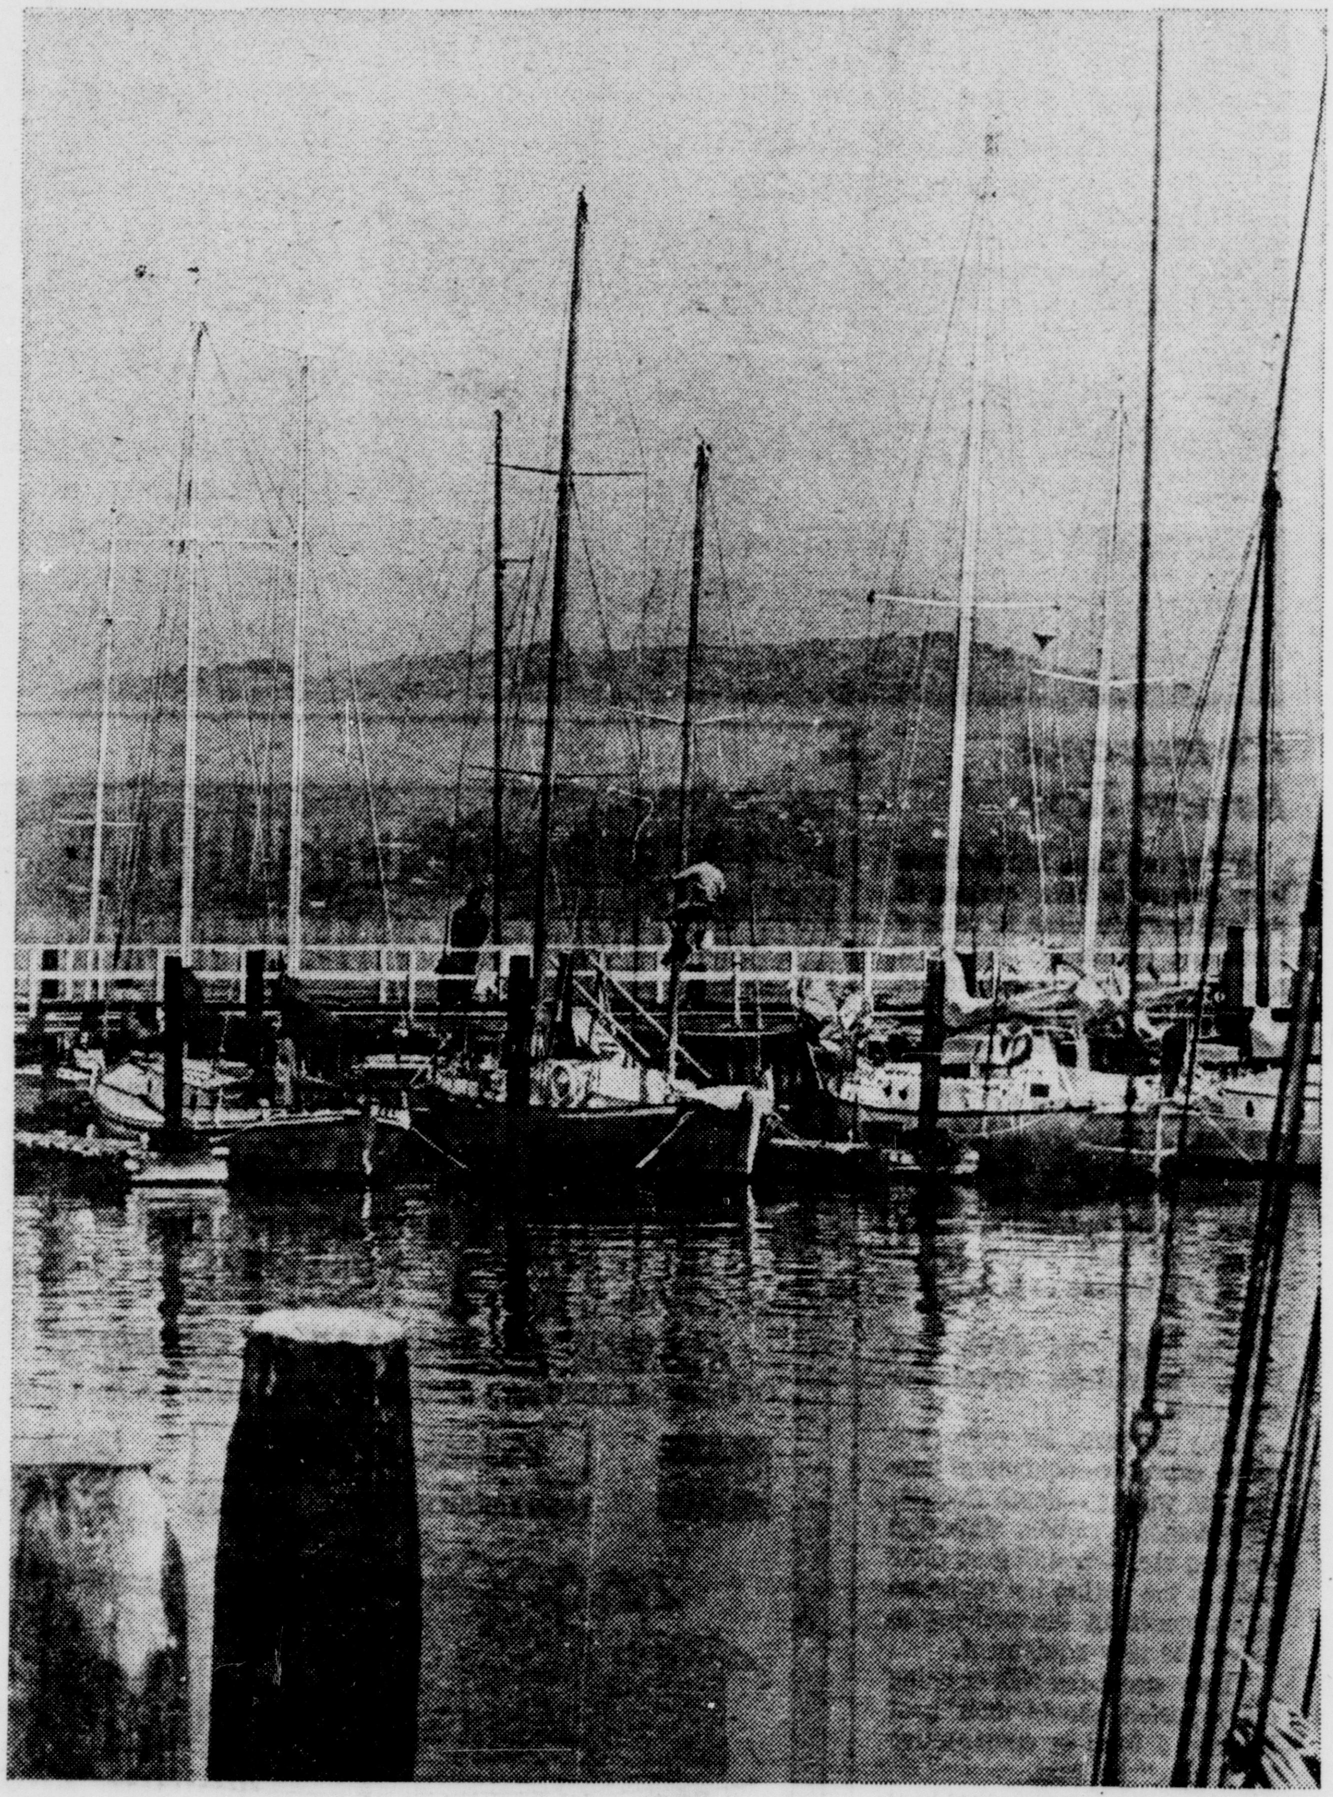
What he found makes up a portfolio of photographs on this and the following pages.

You see some boatowners and craftsmen at work repairing and polishing their craft. You see some boat harbors still quiet and silent. You see some skippers already enjoying the boating, too eager to await the official start of the season.

After tomorrow — opening day — there will be few quiet harbors. Most of the preparatory work will be over. And there will be many, many more boats sailing or powering through the waters of the Bay.



AT LOWRIE'S Yacht Harbor in San Rafael, Ted Davis was at work on the Sharon 1, a 28-foot Monterey hull fishing boat being restored there so that she can once again become a member of the fleet plying the waters of San Francisco Bay.



THERE WAS ACTIVITY, too, on the Sausalito waterfront where one workman had climbed a mast to carry out his chores while carrying on a conversation with a friend watching his efforts from the pier.

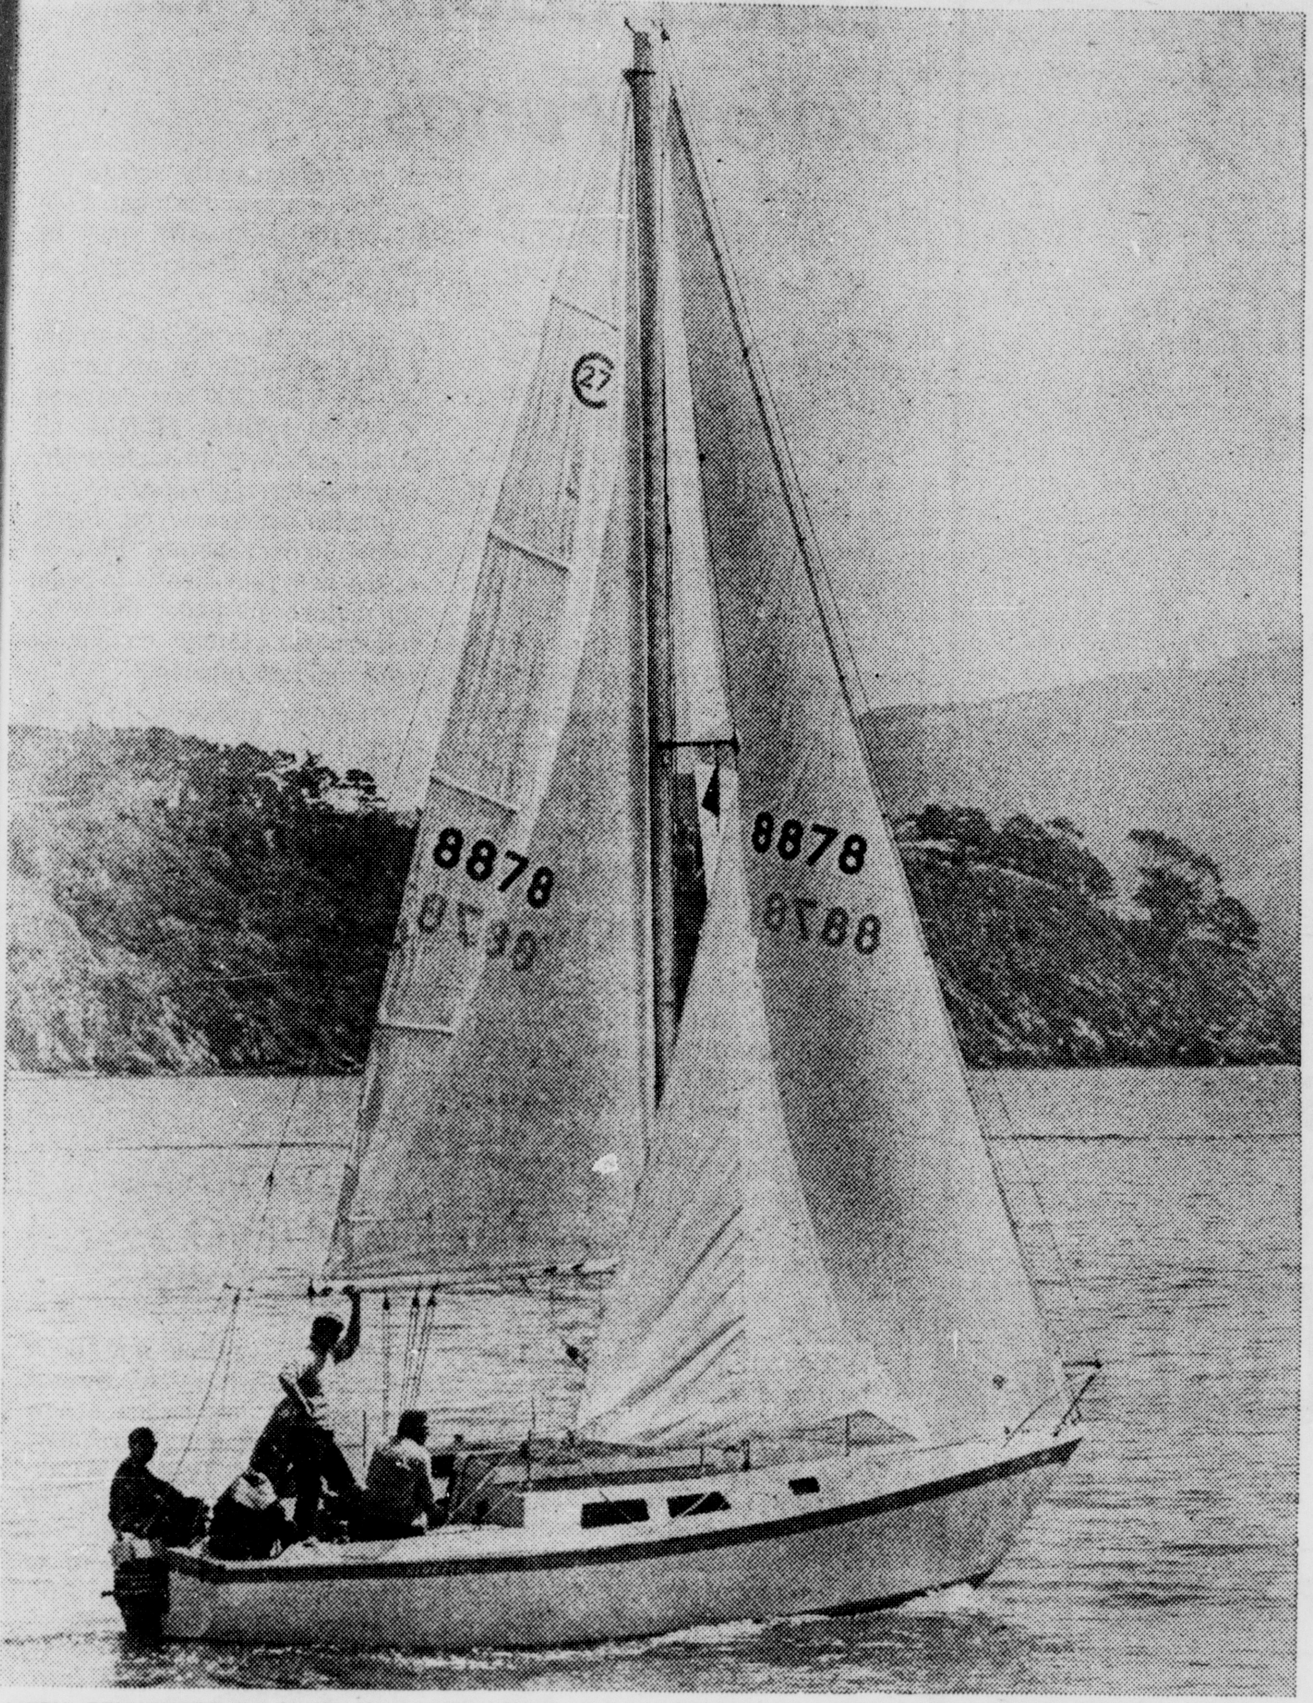
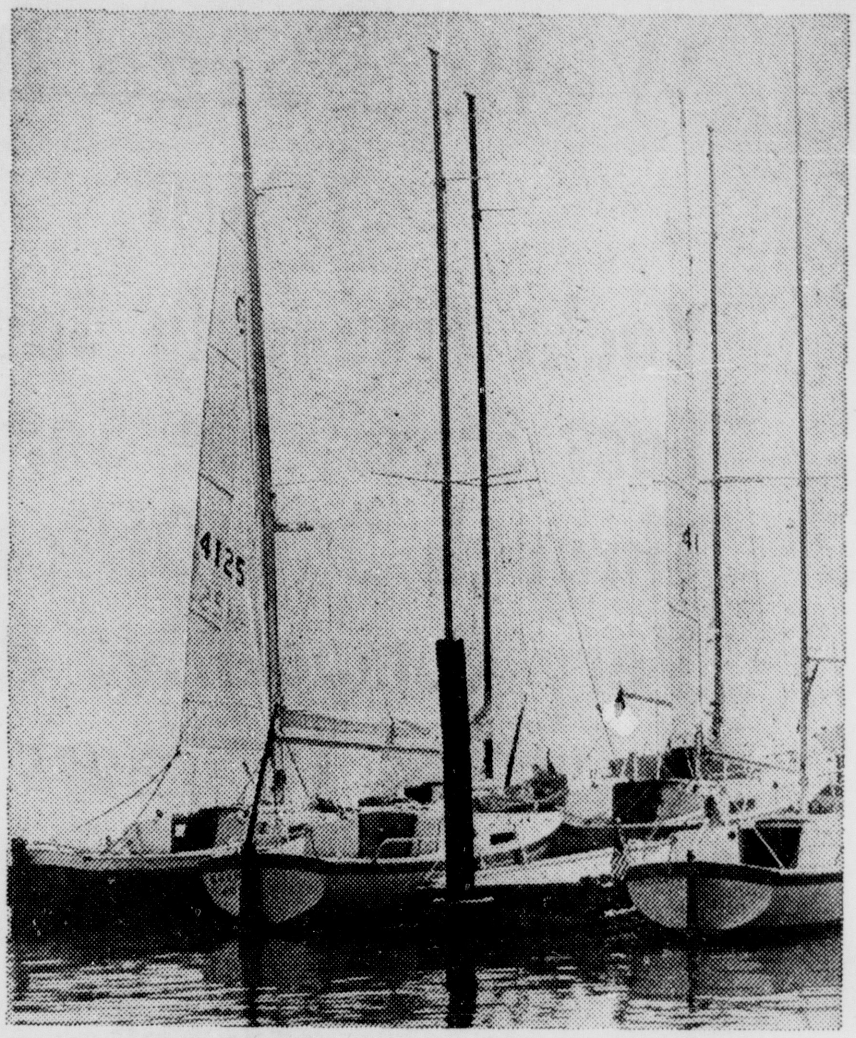
EAGER SKIPPERS have not waited until tomorrow's official opening to test San Francisco Bay and their craft as these two photos taken by Jim Kean from the Sausalito shore attest.





WITH BELVEDERE in the background, above, this party of four enjoys the exhilaration of cutting through the waters of San Francisco under the power of sails and winds. Tomorrow San Francisco Bay will be literally covered with the white and colored hues of sails as sailing craft and powerboats alike take part in the traditional opening day festivities highlighted by a mammoth parade of boats from throughout the Bay Area. Marin County will have a large representation in the spectacle. At upper right, at Sausalito Yacht Club, sails dry in preparation.

It's Foolish Not To Carry Equipment

Going boating without the proper equipment isn't just foolish — it's also against the law.

The Committee for National Safe Boating Week points out that on federal waters, there must be a life-saving device for everyone aboard a pleasure craft. Craft up to 16 feet operated on federal waters must carry proper lights and a fire extinguisher, if of closed construction; craft from 16 to 26 feet long must carry in addition a hand whistle or horn audible for at least one-half mile.

Larger pleasure craft, up to 65 feet long, require a hand or power operated whistle audible at least one-mile, and a bell.

Other items of equipment aren't required, but commonsense dictates that you carry them: Anchor, line, paddle, first aid kit, flashlight, fenders, tool kit, extra can of fuel, compass and distress flares.

Latest Boating Act Allots Funds

The Boat Safety Act of 1971 is the latest significant step in more than 30 years of effort to curtail tragedy among the nation's pleasure boatmen.

The first successful step was the Motor Boat Act of 1940 which set out the minimum requirements for safety equipment aboard small craft. It was followed by the Federal Boating Act of 1958 which introduced numbering for small craft and established the groundwork for improved reporting of boating accidents.

WHILE STATISTICS show that about 1,350 persons have died in small boat accidents during each of the last five years, industry sources point out that the number of recreational boats in use in that period rose from an estimated 8,865,000 in 1965 to 8,814,000 last year.

One of the key provisions of the 1971 federal legislation is authorization for dollars appropriation of 51.1 million dollars over the next five years, of which 37.5 million dollars would go to states to help them draft and carry out their own boat safety laws and safety programs.

This one provision of the law alone is expected to have a significant effect in curtailing boating accidents

OTHER KEY sections of the 1971 legislation call for:

Federal construction and performance standards for boats and associated equipment. The Coast Guard will set the standards after analyzing accident statistics to determine possible areas of hazard. Manufacturers and, to a lesser extent, dealers will be required to certify that their products are built and assembled in compliance with the standards. The bill contains penalty provisions for failure to comply and make proper certification.

Notification by the manufacturer of any defect in a boat. The notification must be made to the first purchaser and to any subsequent purchaser listed on the warranty and to the dealer who sold the boat. Copies of the notification must be sent to the Department of Transportation.

Registration of all motorboats, regardless of horsepower. The 1958 law required states to register at least all motorboats over 10 horsepower. Some states registered all motorcraft, some cut off levels below 10 horsepower. Purpose of the new provision is to bring all motorboats under the regulations for safety equipment and accident reporting.

Granting authority to Coast Guard boarding officers to take immediate steps to remedy such hazards as insufficient lifesaving devices, overloading or lack of fire-fighting devices. The officer may even direct the boat operator to return to his mooring until the problem is corrected.

New federal guidelines to assure uniformity of state boating laws .

CALIFORNIA BOATING DIRECTORY

Lane Magazine and Book Co., publishers of Sunset magazine, has issued a new water-destination directory, "Where to Go Boating in California," that contains 150 pages of information on where to launch, where to water ski, where to sail, where to fish, where to houseboat, where to buy charts, and where to rent watercraft.

Included are 25 pages of maps, plus detailed information on some 900 boating facilities on significant California waters.

Nearby waters of Lower Mexico, Nevada and Arizona are also covered.

The $2.50 illustrated softcover book is being sold in marinas and boat supply shops as well as in bookstores.

WHENEVER a boat is on the water, the life jackets, as well as other safety gear, should be on board. But in the case of children, it is wise to go one step further. Have the youngster wear a life jacket at all times while on the water. Never let him be without its protection, and it may some day prevent a tragic accident. Here, at left, cautious and prudent mother not only insists that her child don a life jacket, but also makes certain that its straps are securely tied.

Tips For Buying A Fiberglass Boat

By STAN DAVIES

Do you know what to look for in buying a fiberglass boat to be sure of getting your money's worth?

From the letters I have received I feel that many would-be boat buyers are quite dazzled and bewildered by those gleaming plastic hulls.

First . . . all the materials which go into a fiberglass or reinforced plastic boat (whatever you want to call them) are in many respects similar. The glass fiber is made by only a couple of firms and each product is very similar. A dozen or so chemical firms which supply the plastic bonding material, polyester resin, are in furious competition, but their polyesters are practically the same.

SINCE THE raw materials of plastic boats are so similar the only real differences can be in design and workmanship. Apart from the design which includes such things as shape, length, beam, flare, sheer, etc., plastic boats fall into two classes of construction.

One type employs a combination of non-woven glass fibers in its two forms . . . chopped or mat . . . together with woven glass fabric. The other type uses non-woven materials only.

Remember, a reinforced plastic boat is much like reinforced concrete. The glass fibers are like the reinforcing steel rods, but it is the polyester resin which is the cement . . . the actual building material of the boat.

MOST TYPES of construction give satisfactory results when properly made, but there are some basic differences in the finished product. Boats which use the woven material as part of the reinforcing frequently have the familiar basket weave pattern in the laminate. They are definitely stronger for equal thickness than the ones using non-woven materials only.

Now before you buy, these are some of the things to check: Sloppy workmanship, rough edges which could cut your hands in an emergency, unfastened parts, scratches, patches and repairs.

HERE ARE a few questions I have been asked by people who have wondered about reinforced plastic boats:

Q. There is a strong aromatic odor under the forward deck of my fiberglass boat. What is it?

A. This is likely an indication that the resin is not cured or hardened properly. However, time will probably take care of it and if the weakness does not show up in some other way, don't worry about it.

Q. I was looking at a boat in a showroom and some areas in the hull seem to have different light reflecting qualities. A faint pattern showed in some places. What does that mean?

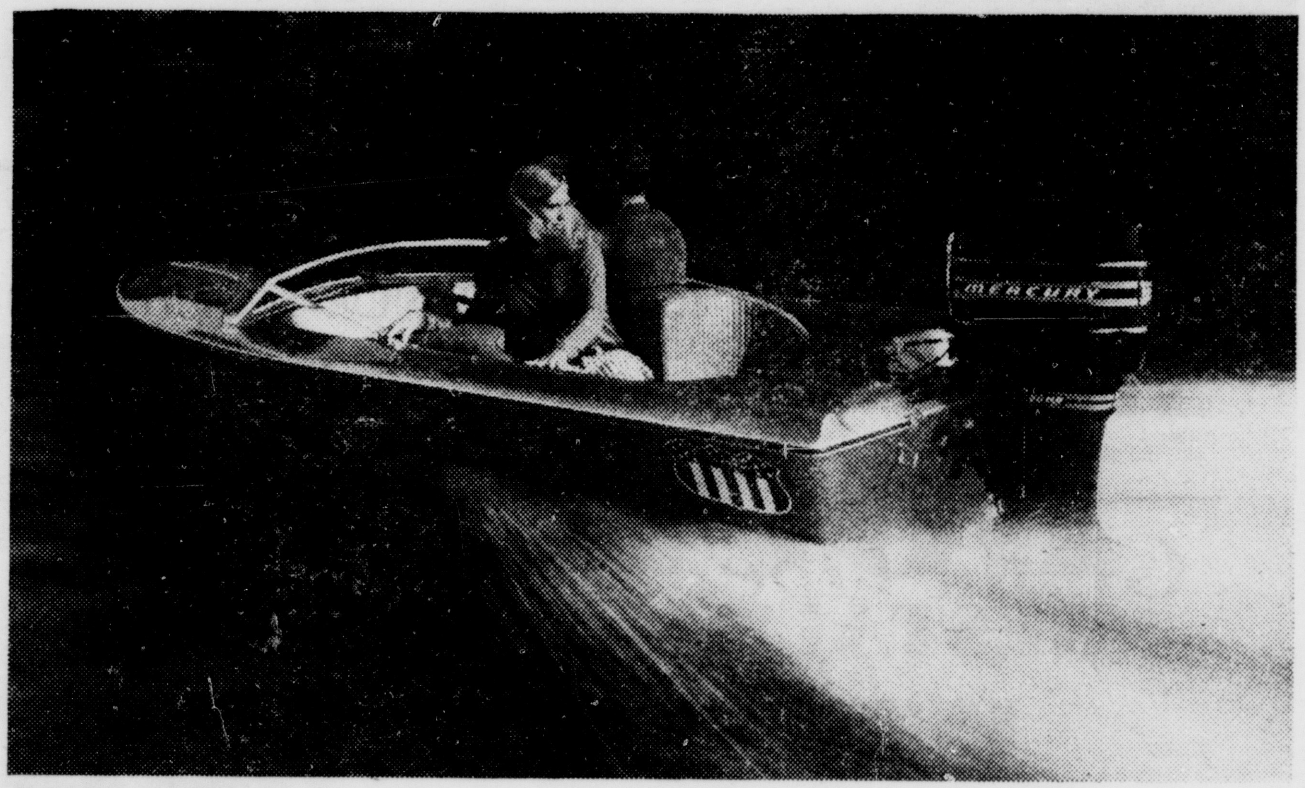
A. It could mean that the pattern of the fiberglass mat is showing through the gel coat merely indicating a sloppy job. On the other hand, it could mean that there are areas in the hull where the ratio of glass particles to resin is off. Resin-starved areas are usually weak spots. Be sure to have an expert to look at it before you buy this boat.

Q. I am thinking of buying a new plastic boat and there appears to be no bracing in it. Should there be?

A. Perhaps the bracing is molded right into the hull. Curves for instance provide their own bracing. The most important area to check is the transom. Is it solid? In large boats there should be knees between transom and keel. However, in smaller boats the bracing is often merely a thickening of the fiberglass and resin material where the transom joins the sides and bottom. Feel it yourself and see if you can twist or turn the transom.

Q. How do you fasten a cleat or other piece of hardware to a slick fiberglass hull?

A. There are two ways. You can drill holes and use through bolts with a hardwood backing block. Or you can laminate the cleat mounted on a small block right into the hull itself with fiberglass cloth and resin.



SLEEKY, SPORTY runabouts like this 15-foot fiberglass model dominated the boating scene in 1971, are back strong in 1972. It combines style with speed, and borrows strongly from the popular California ski boats.

Float Plan Is Wise Precaution

Planning a long cruise for the day, week, or longer?

The Coast Guard urges the boatman who plans to be on the water for any long period to file a "float plan," just like a pilot preparing for a cross-country flight files a flight plan with the Federal Aviation Administration.

All that's involved in filing such a float plan is to give someone ashore a schedule of the events planned for the cruise, telling when and where the trip will start, the approximate route, and the time and place of return. If the boatman fails to return within a reasonable time after his planned return, the person holding the float plan can notify authorities and a search can be started.

The complete float plan recommended by the Coast Guard includes the following information:

Name and phone number of person reporting.

Description of the boat, including color and registration number.

Survival equipment on board such as life jackets, signals, food, water.

Radio type and frequencies.

Trip schedule, including departure time, place of departure, destination, and estimated time of arrival.

If the skipper changes his plans, he should notify the person with whom he left the float plan, so that a needless alarm isn't sounded.

Needed: More Boating Ramps

The continued growth of boating, especially in boats that can be trailered and launched away from home port, is creating a demand for launching ramps, both public and private.

Back in the early 1950s, the big shortage was in marinas. This was met by a concerted effort on the part of the National Assn. of Engine and Boat Manufacturers to promote the design and construction of waterfront basins and facilities. In the 20 years since then, marinas have sprouted throughout the country, some of them capable of berthing up to 2,000 or 3,000 boats.

Launching ramps are simple to build compared to the complicated work that must go into a marina. A typical double ramp needs only about 50 feet of waterfront.

Boat Safety In State Is Improved

There were totals of 118 fatalities and 694 accidents, of which 396 were results of collision.

The summary indicates that the main cause of boating mishaps was human error. Equipment failure and hazardous sea conditions contributed a smaller share.

The type of accident responsible for the highest loss of life, 57, was boat capsizing. Collisions killed 13 and injured another 87. Most of the 233 collisions were directly related to boat operators ignoring the right of way, failing to maintain a proper lookout, or traveling too fast for existing conditions.

Director John Bennett said that total fatalities had increased by only one over 1970. "When the increase of 44,000 boats in 1971 is compared with an increase of only one fatality, we must view this as an improvement in the overall safety picture. Hwever, no one should be satisfied until these figures decline substantially."

Bennett also noted that total property damage was down by $811,886.

Boating Grows

More than 44,900,000 people went boating in 1971, according to the Outboard Boating Club.

Take Care Of That New Boat

Upon taking delivery of a new boat, the typical male finds himself experiencing the same gamut of emotions he does on the arrival of a new car — excitement, pride, nervousness, apprehension.

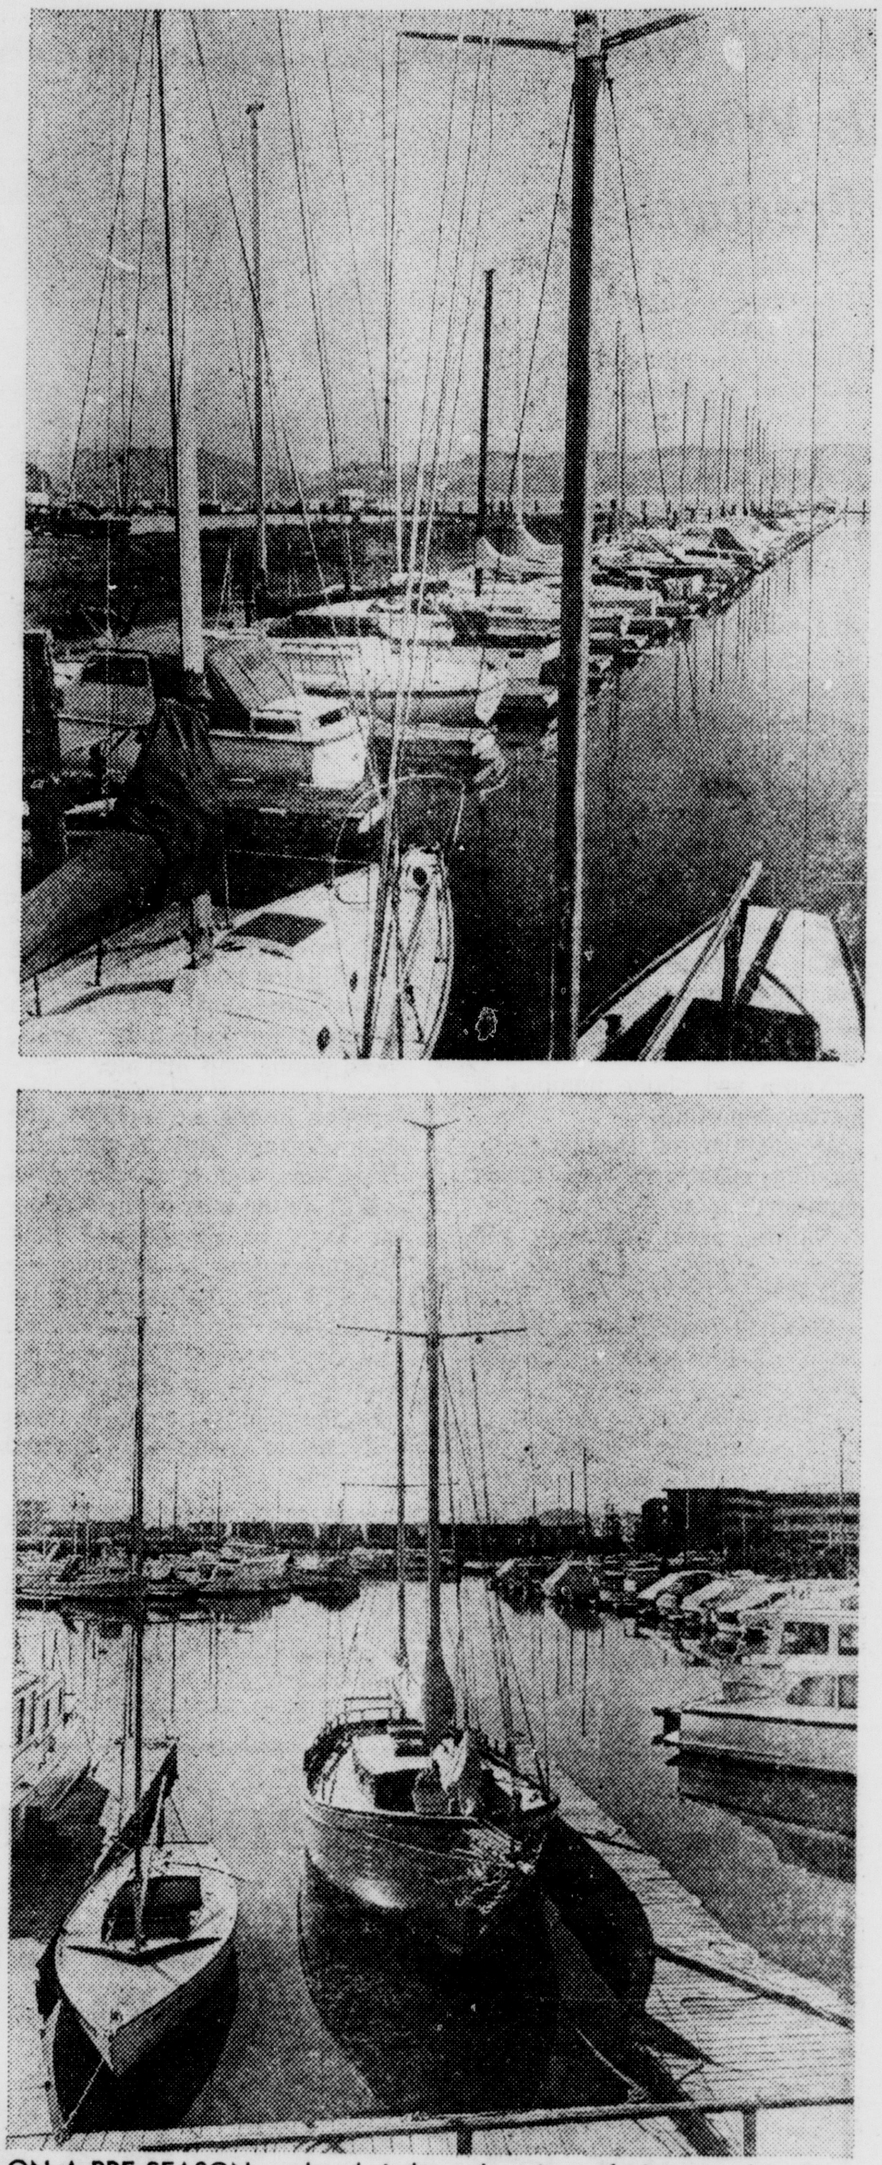
He's happy to have it but isn't too sure of what needs to be done.

Here are some useful tips from the boating experts at Mercury outboards on how to care for a new fiberglass boat when it becomes a member of the family:

Fiberglass "cures" somewhat as does concrete. It becomes hard enough to touch and handle rather quickly, but the final stages of curing taper off slowly over a period of months. By the time a new boat reaches its owner it will have been out of the mold long enough for the curing process to be well along. However, it is well to know that if a relatively new fiberglass boat is subjected to an unusual strain for a period of several days to several weeks, it is apt to be still just "soft" enough to take a gradual set that is apt to be hard to take out.

This means, for example, that a small open fiberglass boat should not be turned over and leaned against a wall with its weight on one gunwale. If this is done the gunwale may take a permanent set. Similarly, trailer support rollers should be carefully adjusted for straight, true and uniform cotact with the bottom of the hull of a fiberglass outboard or stern drive runabout.

If the boat will be moored in dirty water or left at its mooring all season, a thorough waxing of the fiberglass is the best thing to protect the surface from discoloration and fading.



ON A PRE-SEASON weekend, Independent-Journal photographer Jim Kean found a quiet at some Marin yacht harbors that will be missing tomorrow and for the remainder of the busy boating season. At top is Basin 3 of Sausalito's Clipper Yacht Harbor, with all serene. In bottom photo is the Lowrie Yacht Harbor in San Rafael, encircled with apartments, and quiet before the day's activities erupted as boatmen began appearing to ready their craft for the new season.

Boating Is For All The Family

ONE OF THE NICEST things about boating as a recreation is that it is an activity in which the entire family can take part — in preparations as well as the actual cruising. Above, at Anderson's Boatyard in Sausalito, Dolores Righetti of San Francisco works at painting the bottom of the 25-foot cabin cruiser, the Cara Lee, belonging to her son, Bob Righetti, who was also on the scene, lower left, and working. Boating, its advocates point out, is a sport that can be enjoyed by all ages, and even the small child can be assigned a role in the tidying of the boat. (Independent-Journal photo by Jim Kean)

Boating Should Be Fun For Kids

Boating can be as much fun for your youngsters as it is for their parents, but a little common sense and planning will make the trip even more enjoyable for all hands.

The two most important things to remember about children and boating, according to the Outboard Boating Club of America, are:

A BOAT doesn't have enough room for youngsters to run around in so parents must be creative in coming up with different sit-down activities and games to occupy their time.

Let the youngsters know that boating is fun but don't force any of them into your own activities. If you're out for fish and they don't want to hold onto fishing poles, don't force them. They'll be more agreeable and you'll save wear and tear on your nerves.

Before you go out, and during your boating trip, teach your children the common sense rules of boating. Be sure to explain each rule — children are more receptive to instructions if they know the "why." (Outdoor Boating Club publishes a "Rules of the Road" poster which is available free for hanging in the youngster's room or aboard the boat. Write OBC, 401 North Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill., 60611.)

IF YOU'VE ever made a game of learning road signs while traveling by car, you can do the same aboard the boat. Make a game of learning the various buoys or markers in the water. Or have them keep track of how many boats of different shapes and sizes they see. This activity should keep the children content for a while.

If the child is old enough, put him to work! He can probably do routine chores, such as stowing gear. Children also serve as a lookout for floating debris, other boats and channel markers. And they usually are eager to help in coiling lines, taking in fenders, etc.

When it's time to paint or polish your boat, let the youngsters help. If they see you working on the boat, as well as enjoying boating, they'll get a better picture of the sport and develop a sense of responsibility toward their craft — an important factor in developing future seamen.

EVEN THE YOUNGEST member of the crew isn't too young to benefit from — and enjoy — some instruction of boatmanship while on outings. An explanation of the charts being used to plot the course will make the entire family feel that they are all truly a part of the activities. There are opportunities, too, for instruction in the meaning of navigational aids, in hazards along the way, and in the fundamentals of safe boating.

EATING ON BOARD the boat can be fun, if you remember to keep the menu simple. These couples have brought along chicken, fresh fruit, a packaged dessert and canned drinks for their lunch, and use paper plates and plastic forks to make the clean-up easy.

Picnics Part Of Boating Fun

Do you often get hungry or thirsty when out on your small boat?

Well, it's no surprise since the combination of the outdoor air, the water and a little bit of sunshine usually lead to a bigger and better appetite.

The Evinrude News Service suggests you plan on having a meal on board during your next outing, but it should be kept simple. A serving of cold cuts, salads and fruit, kept fresh in aluminum foil or plastic container, is the best bet to keeping the meal and entire outing enjoyable.

AS FOR DRINKS, iced tea and fruit juices make ideal hot weather beverages. With these drinks in a portable cooler, they can be kept chilled during even the hottest of days.

Breads, cakes and cookies may be placed in the coolers also, but only after they have been placed in a watertight container. Be sure to keep these foods away from the sun. Storage under the gunwale or in any shaded area is the best bet.

As for the meal itself, place it on a card table if your boat has an open cockpit with ample space. You'll probably find it advisable to seek a protected cove or sheltered anchorage when you're about to eat. In addition, unless the boat is anchored down, it will remain in constant motion, and little stability could be achieved.

A second anchor, this one tied from the stern, will keep the boat from swinging in the wind or current.

COOKOUTS ON board are highly discouraged because of the fire hazard. If cooking is necessary, however, take a few simple precautions. Place the cooker as far away from the engine compartment as possible, and keep the immediate area clean. Be equally careful with stored gasoline.

Cookouts are ideal, though, for shore picnics. A simple meal with food to grill will probably please the family. Equipment such as a portable grill, charcoal, blankets, and paper cups, plates and eating utensils can be easily transported aboard your boat and brought ashore.

Whether eating on board or ashore, be certain to leave the area clean when you're finished. Don't be a litterbug. Put your refuse in bags or boxes and properly dispose of them.

Scandinavia Caters To Young Americans

The Travel Pages

The five countries of Scandinavia (Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden), diverse in several ways, are as one in welcoming the young traveler from America.

Though some European countries are cool toward the wearers of long hair and blue jeans, this is not true of Scandinavia, which is youth-oriented and looks with tolerance upon ephemeral fashions. This point of view may even bring practical dividends, for "the swinging youth of today becomes the staid tourist of tomorrow."

THANKS TO new fares available from airlines serving Scandinavia, it is possible in 1972 to cover all the Viking lands at a very modest cost. In addition, the Scandinavian countries offer the young traveler special considerations in accommodations, domestic transportation and recreation. Also there are opportunities for stimulating experiences in the cultural, artistic and educational fields.

Young visitors will find that language is no major barrier in "meeting the people and seeing their way of life" — for many Scandinavians speak English.

Youth hostels in Scandinavia are among the best in Europe. Most are under strict government supervision, with the emphasis on comfort and cleanliness. Costs are modest — a night's lodging can come to as little as 75 cents, with meals comparably priced.

Other types of inexpensive accommodations include approved camping sites (most offer cooking and food shopping facilities) as well as moderately-priced boarding houses, pensions, tourist lodges and guesthouses.

Traveling within the various countries is facilitated by low and in many instances special fares on planes, trains, buses and boats.

However, to young people everywhere, bicycling and hiking have not lost their universal appeal, and such leisurely trips through the Scandinavian countryside are very popular.

THERE ARE a wealth of recreational and cultural activities available to the young visitor. Because of its varied landscape, scenic Scandinavia provides a wide variety of land and water sports, including glacier skiing in summer.

Culturally, there are many national and local festivals, music from jazz to classical, theater, ballet, opera, folk dancing, and one must not forget the famous Scandinavian arts and crafts.

BICYCLES PLAY a major role in transportation in Scandinavia, and visiting young Americans have learned to take full advantage of the bike lanes and paths that sometimes follow the main highways and that sometimes take off through the scenic countryside.

CITY LIFE IN Scandinavia has its attractions for youthful Americans, too. Pubs patterned after the British, but with a Nordic flavor all their own, are popular gathering spots for the younger crowds, and often offer top-grade jazz music.

THE BALINESE TOOTH-FILER HAS NOTHING TO DO WITH DENTISTRY

THE EXOTIC RITUALS and customs of the peoples never fail to fascinate the western visitor to Indonesia. But if you are one of those who cringes at the mere thought of a visit to your dentist, the ritual performed by Ida Baus Okatlaga of Bali is one you might prefer to skip. Ida Bagus Okatlaga is a tooth-filer. Not a puller or filler of teeth, but a filer. His work has nothing to do with dentistry. He is a Brahman, a temple priest of Bali's Hindu religion. In his village of Pemetjutan or in nearby communities, some 50 times a year, as one of the puberty ceremonies, he holds tooth-filing rituals. Working with one small flat file, one miniature triangular file, a tiny cleansing hammer and a dab of analgesic unguent, he files a small portion of the upper teeth of young boys and girls. The purpose: To diminish evil, by filing away the less attractive qualities of human nature. A side result: The even white smiles for such Balinese are famous.

Cost Is Up, But Travel Is Still A Bargain

By MURRAY J. BROWN

The American tourist will generally have to pay slightly more than last year because of the devaluation of tha U.S. dollar but travel abroad can still be a bargain.

So says a man who should know — Stephen S. Halsey, senior vice president and general manager of the travel division of American Express.

"Dollar devaluation makes it a bit more expensive to travel outside the United States," he said, "but on the basis of what the dollar still buys overseas compared to what it buys here, the average American still has the best of it."

Halsey said that the loss in the purchasing power of the dollar "while it fluctuates from country to country, is still fairly modest."

AS AN EXAMPLE, he cited the British pound. Before the international monetary crisis last year, the pound was pegged at about $2.40. Now Americans are paying about $2.60, or roughly 8.5 per cent more.

"Generally, however, an American can buy more in Britain for a pound than he can in the United States for his $2.60," Halsey said. "To compound our advantage, American wage scales make the $2.60 — or the pound — easier to come by."

He said the same holds true in other countries whose currencies have been revalued in relation to the dollar, such as France, West Germany, Japan among others.

As for getting there, Halsey noted that major international airlines had agreed to substantial fare reductions on the trans-Atlantic routes in 1972 before the currency crisis.

"But the effects of dollar devaluation are wiping out many of the intended savings," he said. "To compensate, the International Air Transport Association has agreed to a 3 to 7 per cent increase on the new ticket prices, depending on destination."

AS A RESULT, he said, Americans will end up paying about the same — or slightly more — than last year for most round trip tickets. There are some exceptions, he noted, including most 22-to-45 day "excursions." For instance, you can fly New York-London roundtrip for $313, or about $19 less than last summer.

A seasoned traveler himself, Halsey considers bargain hunting to be part of the fun of the game. Here are some suggestions he passed along:

Consider visiting countries where the dollar devaluation has had little or no effects on travel costs. Austria, Greece, Portugal, Spain and Yugoslavia are among countries still rated as "good buys" by travel professionals. Also Mexico and much of South America where the dollar's value has not changed.

Remember that hotel accommodations, transportation, etc. usually cost less and are more readily available in the so-called off-season months. For example, Paris in the spring, London in the fall, the Caribbean in the summer, and Scandinavia in the winter.

Check on packaged tours. Wholesale and retail tour operators offer thousands of economical all-inclusive package deals for groups and individual travelers designed to fit most travel budgets.

In connection with packaged tours, Halsey said, American Express, will hold the line on previously-published 1972 prices for the land portions even though they are based on the pre-devalued dollar. Air fares will have to comply with IATA schedules.

"THIS YEAR'S tours were planned early in 1971 and bulk contracts for hotel space, local sightseeing, restaurants and other features were drawn in 1971 before the dollar devaluation," he said. "But American Express has always held to published prices which means we will stick to prices shown in our Europe tours book for 1972."

Some major operators and hotel chains already are passing along the difference.

A Little Place In Acapulco

A couple of years back, if you wanted to fulfill that dream of owning a little place by the sea in Acapulco, you had to acquire it through a series of legal subterfuges that cost almost as much as the property itself.

This was because the Mexican Constitution stated: "No foreigner can directly own real estate within 100 kilometers from the borders and 50 kilometers from the coasts." Since Acapulco is the only seaside resort in the world that can guarantee 360 days of perfect weather and sunshine every year, thousands of Americans and Canadians persisted through the massive legal red tape to acquire their own little piece of "Paradise."

BUT SINCE mid-1971 Mexico has made it simple and legal for you to buy a lot, a villa or a condominium apartment, and you will receive title almost as if you were a Mexican citizen. The purpose in liberalizing the law was to attract more foreign capital to accelerate the industrial and tourist development of Mexico and already the results are beginnng to show. Real estate offices, such as the one in the Acapulco Hilton Hotel, are booming with American and Canadians with checks in hand to buy property . . . especially income properties such as efficiency apartments in the new condominium "Apart-hotels" which the owner can occupy free when he wants to vacation in Acapulco and are maintained and rented for him at all other times.

Two examples are the El Matador Hotel & Racquet Club which recently opened and the new International Turtle Club, under construction. Both of these properties are designed to operate as hotels when the owners are not in residence with a unique design that makes each hotel type room an efficiency apartment with its own kitchenette, patio, bath and private entrance.

THE NEW LAW of ownership for foreigners is in the form of a bank administered trust which, like most property trusts, require renewal every 30 years.

The 30-year renewal clause might discourage some, but most investors, it is claimed, will want to renew their trust even earlier to avoid inheritance taxes, while others will want to sell and take their profit long before the trust would need renewing.

How Fair Are The Media To Nixon And His Administration?

PRESIDENT NIXON AND THE PRESS by James Keogh; Funk and Wagnalls, 204 pages, $6.95. Reviewed by Bryce W. Anderson.

James Keogh is a longtime writer and editor for the Omaha World-Herald and Time magazine, who became special assistant to President Richard M. Nixon in 1971. In "President Nixon and the Press," he writes with a bias acquired in the latter position; but he attacks tellingly an opposite bias held by many in the news media.

Keogh puts the "adversary position" of government and press in some historical perspective. But he cites chapter and verse to show that"the obsession with the negative" by the latter has become greater during the Nixon administhation.

This results, claims Keogh, from overwhelming "liberal-left" orientation of those writing and handling the news, plus an intrusion of slanted comment into news columns and onto news programs that is a throwback to the "personal journalism" of a century ago. "The inflexibility of their own outlook blinded many journalists to the prospect that there would be a high degree or initiative, open-mindedness and flexibility in the Nixon administration," he contends — and marshals evidence to support this contention.

Keogh is more scholarly, better informed and a much better writer than John R. Coyne Jr., whose book on Spiro Agnew and the "liberal-left", "The Impudent Snobs," appeared a few weeks ago. Together, the two volumes may be taken as evidence that the "middle of the road" is starting to talk back.

Certainly there has been enough published from the left, and the middle is entitled to its inning. Keogh scores for it. There are many in the business of news writing and gathering who believe largely as he does about elements among their fellowcraftsmen, even if not about Richard Nixon.

YEARS BEFORE HE ascended to the presidency, Richard M. Nixon had his most famous run-in with the press. In November, 1962, in Beverly Hills, angry and dejected over his defeat by Edmund G. Brown in the election for governor of California, he clenched his fist and set his jaw as he delivered his "you won't have Nixon to kick around anymore" attack upon newspaper coverage of his campaign. As President he has continued to be at odds at times with segments of the media.

Snow's Young Rebels

THE MALCONTENTS by C. P. Snow; Scribner's, 277 pages, $6.95. Reviewed by Alice Dalbey.

C. P. Snow's new novel — his first since completion of the "Strangers and Brothers" series — is about the young, rebellious, socially-conscious intelligentsia of Great Britain.

By and large, Snow's youthful graduate students — they call themselves "The Group" — are believable. Their excuses for violence are as old as revolution and, of course, the end always justifies the means.

But the most sympathetic, convincing characters are not the students. Rather, they are their patient, protective, long-suffering parents.

Snow is an old hand at keeping a secret and his suspense is carefully plotted. Will the students' plan to destroy the reputation of a public figure succeed? Or will they be exposed and prosecuted for having obtained evidence illegally?

But the suspense comes a cropper via suicide — or is it murder? — and the great scheme is sidetracked. What results is lenghty introspection and debate about loyalty, guilt, honor and the nature of betrayal.

This is a thoughtful, though wordy, novel about a contemporary problem. It should be of intense interest to parents of brilliant young adults.

SOME NEW BOOKS FOR THE JUNIORS

If there are children in the home, there is also a plethora of milk and juice cartons that ultimately find their way into the trash can.

Clever Betsy Pflug suggests in her "Pint-Size Fun" (Lippincott, $3.95) that instead of discarding the cartons, you put them to use as the raw materials for some creative and easy craft projects for the small ones in the family.

It is the fun way to recycle, and from the empty cartons can come such accomplishments as a mobile spider, a motorboat for the bathtub, a whole menagerie of animals, a model town with streets and houses, likewise a farm, Indian beadwork and kaleidoscope. Carton sculpting and wax printing molds receive special attention.

Miss Pflug is very good at this sort of thing, as she proved with her earlier craft books for children — "Boxed-In Doll Houses," "You Can" and "Funny Bags." But this time she has outdone herself with some really ingenious ideas that imaginative children are certain to use as a taking-off point for some projects and designs they will conceive for themselves. "Pint-Size Fun" is a sure pleaser for kids and tykes with nimble fingers and busy minds.

THE BALLAD about the old farmer MacDonald and his possessions, brought over from England to the Appalachian backwoods in the early 1800s, has delighted Americans for generations. With its huge and diverse cast, it also presents a book illustrator with a wonderful opportunity to cut loose his creative talents. Robert Quackenbush does just that with colorful artwork pitched at the lower age levels in his version of "Old MacDonald Had a Farm" (Lippincott, $4.95).

Quackenbush has stressed realism over humor, but manages to work a good measure of both into his pictures. And along with the catchy words and the engaging illustrations, there is also the music to the song for those children who prefer singing to reading. A good fun romp with whatto many children will be an old friend.

FOR GENERATIONS now cat and mice have been entertaining children with their antics — remember the old Tom and Jerry cartoons? Usually the combination meant a battle of wits and a chase, with the mouse outdoing his larger foe. Author Kathy Mandry, however, in "The Cat & the Mouse & the Mouse & the Cat" (Pantheon, $4.50) has concocted a more original tale of a cat and mouse who become pals instead of enemies, and of the problems of the former when they are separated temporarily. Unfortunately this gentle little story for pre-school and early grade boys and girls suffers somewhat from Joe Toro's illustrations which, we suspect, do not match up with most children's ideas of what cats and mice, even fictional ones, look like.

The talented Marin team of writer Edith Thacher Hurd and artist Clement Hurd have collaborated on another book featuring their popular character Johnny Lion. This time it is "Johnny Lion's Rubber Boots" (Harper, $2.50) and it tells the story of one rainy day in the life of our young hero. Time hangs heavily for Johnny when he is forced to remain indoors, but Father Lion comes to the rescue with a pair of red rubber boots that enable his son to again join in the adventures out-of-doors. As with all Hurd books, it is a well-told and nicely-illustrated story. And the $2.50 price is a pleasant surprise in this day and age.

Animal families are well established as characters in children's fiction. Rabbits, bears, piglets, etc. But donkeys, you will have to admit, are a change. Edith Holden Cooke in her "The Bratchets" (Holt, Rine-hart and Winston, $4.95) never comes right out and says that is what her principals are. But illustrator Lansing C. Holden's pictures, complete with long ears and tails, give them away. There are seven Bratchets in all, counting the parents, and they are an active, sometimes naughty, bunch. Their antics will keep small ones, again the 4 to 8-year range, well entertained and giggling right up to the last page — "the tail end of the Bratchets."

The Shame Of Newark

NO CAUSE FOR INDICTMENT by Ron Porambo; Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 398 pages, $8.95. Reviewed by Frank Farrara.

The civic corruption, the race riots, the teachers' strike in Newark, N.J., have made news across the U.S. in recent years, but outside the immediate area interest died when headlines faded.

Porambo, a newspaper reporter, recounts a fuller story after four years of work, and it is worse than even the darkest headlines.

Rampant racism, police corruption, official criminality, and just about every conceivable ill that could befall a city is exposed.

The title is derived from the fact that 23 persons were killed in the 1967 race riot, 21 of them black, and no punitive action was taken against police, who Porambo contends killed wantonly.

Former mayor Hugh Addonizio was found guilty of extortion and imprisoned, and six of the city's seven councilmen were indicted with him, but Newark has a long way to go.

Maybe we have a haughty exterior, but test our interior for prices and ideas, on draperies, carpets, etc.

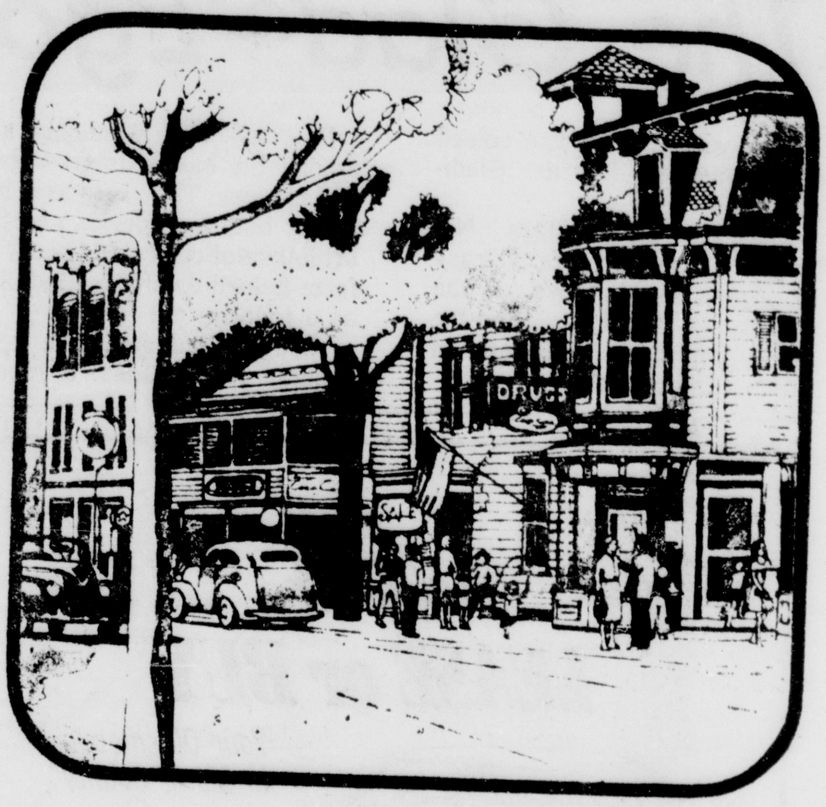
Middle America, Region Of Our Roots, Treated Warmly



By DON KEOWN

Millions of Californians trace their ancestral, if not their personal roots, back to the American Southwest or Midwest, from whence came their families in quest of gold, a gentler climate, orange groves, Hollywood fame, aerospace jobs or any or many of the other attractions this state dangled before them.

Thus there exists in most of us an affinity for those regions to the east, and especially for those days when our fathers or grandfathers still worked the farms, ran the stores and taught the schools on the plains of Texas, the prairies of Kansas and Iowa or in the hills of Arkansas and Missouri.

These are the places, the period and the people about which Winston M. Estes writes.

He wrote about them first in "Another Part of the House," sensitively and humorously, and the Chicago Sun-Times praised it as "a fine book — warm and real and funny" and The New Yorkers said, "The stream of life runs true from the beginning of the book to its end."

He writes about them again in "A Streetful of People," and the earlier descriptions still apply.

Specifically, Estes' stories are about one town in Texas, in whose dusty panhandle he grew up, and about the Depression years of the 1930s of his boyhood. But those who spent those same years in any small Southwestern or Midwestern town, or who have listened while parents or grandparents told stories about such times and palces, will have no difficulty identifying with Estes' characters and incidents.

Very familiar will be the alcoholically inclined local judge who decides to over-imbibe on the very day he is scheduled to serve as official greeter to the visiting governor. So, too, the harried chairman of the San Jacinto Day Parade, although in your town the occasion may have been Decoration Day, the Fourth of July or the county fair. And the self-anointed town cultural leader with the long suffering husband. The ritual of the Rotary Club meeting. The battle of wits between bill collector and the town deadbeats.

Then there is the shapely schoolteacher the whole town suspects of spending her summer dancing in the "girlie" show at the Dallas Fair — although the accusation can't be proved. A really hilarious account is that of the flabby high school lad, a future state road commissioner, who on a bet broke the monotony of the Depression years by circling the block in his BVDs.

Perhaps our personal favorite is the story of rural mail carrier Ben Hodges and his trauma on retirement day, reminding us of our own rural mail carrier father in Kansas who postponed his retirement as long as possible, and whose proudest possession at his death was the watch presented to him by the patrons on his route.

Like so many of us, Winston Estes, a retired Air Force officer, no longer lives in the region where he grew up. He resides now in Virginia. But it is plain that the Southwest still has first call upon him as a native son. For while what he writes is very, very funny, it is also compassionate and understanding, more appreciative of the special character of these towns and these people than it is satirical.

That is important, for there is an ugly tendency on the part of too many who have left Middle America to relocate upon one of its coasts to look back at their old homes with disdain or condescension. There is no justification for such snobbery. True, while the small towns of the Midwest and Southwest have in some cases changed very little in the four decades that have passed since the events of "A Streetful of People" supposedly took place, and while there is still unlikely to be found there the cultural advantages and sophistication of the big cities and the eastern and Pacific suburbs, this means simply that life there is different — not necessarily inferior.

A couple of years back we were sitting on the half-century-old porch swing at our parents' home in the southwestern Kansas town where they had lived virtually their entire lives, and which had gained nothing in population in all that time, and we were aware vaguely of something strange and unsettling. Sudenly we realized what it was: We had been seated there in the twilight for 10 or 15 minutes without hearing a single obtrusive sound other than some birds twittering — no automobile horns, no trucks backfiring, no planes overhead, not even the seemingly omnipresent power mowers. It was the kind of peace and silence one could find in few other places in America today. And as we looked around us, the air was clear and unpolluted. Small wonder the neighbor woman across the street, seemingly already elderly when we were growing up, was soon to celebrate her 100th birthday in good health.

Winston Estes is aware that, while many of us were lured away from these towns by the restlessness that is a part of America, those who chose to remain and settle for less in the way of material things have not really been shortchanged. They have certain advantages, including an orderly pace in life, that are at least as valuable as symphony concerts and shopping centers. Recognition of this is as much a part of Estes' delightful book as its depiction of the distinctive flavor and character of these communities and their inhabitants.

DREAM interpretation is likely to supplant dieting as the favorite subject of authors of self-improvement books.

The latest in the field is "How to Interpret Your Own Dreams (In One Minute or Less" by Thomas Chetwynd, published by Perer H. Wyden Inc. of 750 Third Ave., New York.

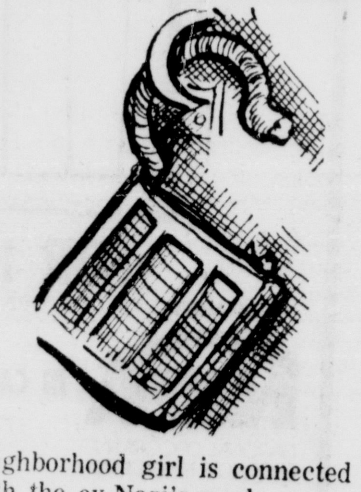
Chetwynd includes an encyclopedic dictionary of dream symbols and subjects and their meaning — a baby can mean "the birth of new potentialities within the individual" or conversely "bondage to childishness," a cripple "fear of impotence."

This is precisely what other authors of other books in the field have insisted cannot be done with any authenticity. Dreams, they say, are too personal an affair with the dreamer for such impersonal applications. What means one thing for one dreamer means something quite different for another. And that seems to make good sense. Still, the Chatwynd dictionary is fun on the parlor or games or astrology level.

FAWCETT HAS published as a $1.25 paperback the "Official Major League Baseball Record Book" with statistics through the 1972 season.

Sleuths & Suspense

A REPORT FROM GROUP 17 by Robert C. O'Brien; Atheneum, 210 pages, $5.95. Reviewed by Don Keown.



Robert C. O'Brien blends elements of the suspense novel, the spy thriller and the science fiction genre to produce this entertaining and rather chilling piece.

Along the Potomac outside Washington D.C. on a Russian-owned estate that is off-limits to the U.S. government, a former German Nazi scientist is at work perfecting what is suspected to be weapons of biological warfare. A concerned Uncle Sam asks civilian virologist Fergus O'Neil to look into the matter — unofficially and covertly.

O'Neil soon learns that Dr. Helmuth Schutz is engaged in sinister experimentation that goes far beyond that with which his Russian masters are acquainted. He believes, too, that the disappearance of a young neighborhood girl is connected with the ex-Nazi's work.

As with Russians, the use of Nazi war criminals as villains in this kind of fiction is reaching a point of over-exploitation. And O' Brien's plot moves so rapidly that he never really has the time to etch in his characters. They remain one-dimensional. But those are only two quarrels with what is undeniably a generally well-done, attention-holding novel. And O'Brien uses his personal knowledge of microbiology and genetics with excellent effect.

The Glad—'Ego Builder'

It doesn't matter who coined the phrase to describe Gladiolus: it's true.

They are "ego builders." Not only because they are so easy to grow, but because of the wide range of colors — and the many landscape situations in which Glads excel.

It's true that Gladiolus are among the easiest-to-grow garden choices. They rate as a top flower bulb in America and the brilliance of color and beauty of form helped establish Gladiolus as a favorite cut flower.

Though Gladiolus have been popular for decades, a recent wave of increased popluarity has been generated by the new hybrid varieties introjuced by dedicated plantsmen, who spend years to develop such dazzling Glads.

Among today's hybrid Gladiolus are varieties which grow five-to-six feet tall. They produce 20 or more perfectly formed florets; some measure five inches across.

THE COLOR range to be found among the hybrid Glads is unbelievable. There are varie-ties which will produce blooms in almost every color imaginable — including shades of blue, purple, violet and green, which are not commonly found in the flower kingdom.

In addition to separate colors, there are multi-colored varieties which contain combinations of two, three, or four colors in each floret.

Part of the ego-building connotation surrounding the growing of Gladiolus is that you can plant Glads in the garden in favorite colors — and can select hues which will match the indoor decorations when the spikes are cut for arrangements in the home. Such pride of accomplishment is hard to describe, but easy to relish and enjoy.

THERE ARE low-growing tiny Tot Glads, to highlight garden borders; myriad other choices, in varying heights, for summer accents in the landscape.

Some Californians started planting Glads a few months ago, and are beginning to enjoy the blooming results and will continue to do so — if they followed-up with subsequent plantings every few weeks.

HYBRID GLADS are called "ego-builders" for a good reason. They are easy to grow, and come in a wide range of colors that permit you to select hues to match your indoor decorations in fashioning lovely floral arrangements with their sculptured beauty.

The Adventures Of One Turf Farmer

By FRANK J. TAYLOR

In my scheme, the lawns on either side of our view-window living room are more than patches of grass on which to snooze or play croquet on a sunny day.

They're summer-time extensions of the dining and living rooms.

They're air conditioners and also outdoor rocking-chair gathering places. Even more, they're micro-farms from which I harvest fragrant crops every time the grass is clipped.

An expert lawn-master would probably rate ours as the most neglected lawns in the neighborhood because the turf is a hodgepodge of grasses, clover, dichondra and even vetches, the one groundcover tough enough to survive in the Bermuda grass that invaded the sunny third of the front lawn.

"Why don't you plow up the mess, sterilize the soil and start over again?" a lawn expert asked recently.

BUT I'M NOT about to follow his suggestion. What with three showers a week guaranteed by our make-your-own-rain system and monthly feedings of lawn food, the turf stays green and cool and springy underfoot and it yields a weekly crop.

That's where the turf farming concept comes in. The grasses and clover lap up the plant food I spread. Much of the nutrient finds its way into the mower bags of clippings. We spread this as mulch around roses, shrubs, fruit trees and vegetables. It works down into the soil.

That's about the easiest way I can think of, off hand, to turn fertilizer pellets into organic plant food. Let the turf do the work.

Some years back when we first became turf farmers we irrigated the lawns by dragging hoses around and moving sprinklers from spot to spot. Somehow there were always dry areas the sprinklers didn't cover. It was a messy, time-consuming chore.

One day after The Watering Committee had wasted half a day dragging hoses around (while I was loafing at the office) she asked sarcastically: "When is your scientific daydreaming going to come up with a better watering brainstorm?" The message came through clear and strong.

AFTER PICKING up several hundred feet of second-hand pipe, I cut and threaded and hooked up lengths, screwed sprinkler heads into the Ts, and turned on the water. Homemade rain fell on every inch of the lawns. But the pipe was still on top of the grass instead of under it. Burying that pipe beneath the sod was anything but lazy gardening. But it was one-time toil that liberated us from repetitive toil.

So in the long run it was indolent gardening.

The nemesis to turf farming is the brown spot that shows up almost overnight. The first impulse is to soak the brown spot, but grass experts tell me, "That's exactly the wrong thing to do; either lawn moth weevils are chewing the grass roots, or fungus is making the grass sick, and both thrive on more water."

Sometimes in the evening I see tiny moths hopping on the grass around the brown spot. Where there are moths, there must be weevils from which they hatch. Loading the hose turf-gun with dibrom, I dunk the brown spot and the grass around it.

IF THE GRASS doesn't green up in a few days. I know it's fungus trouble, which calls for another medicine, a lawn disease control.

In the warm summer months I husband our turf farm like the tomato patch or the tuberous begonias. In every square foot of lawn there are scores of plants crowding each other for space and food. They can starve in a hurry. What a healthy turf needs most of all, I've learned from the turf farming adventure, is an ample and regular mealtime.

House Plants Enjoy A Gentle Scrubbing

Better Homes and Gardens "House Plants" book offers tips for grooming your plants:

Does the foliage look dusty? Carry a soft, dampened cloth with you as you water the plants. Gently wipe the leaves, supporting each leaf as you dust it. And to keep your plant looking well-tended, remove any yellowing foliage.

A CHECKLIST FOR GARDENERS OF MARIN

✓Mother's Day isn't far off — May 14. Consider a gift plant in bloom. Or an indoor foliage plant.

✓All kinds of annuals can be transplanted from nursery flats. After they get a good start, pinch them back to encourage side branching and additional bloom.

✓Container-established Marguerites can be used to brighten drab spots in your garden. They like the sun.

If You Want To Keep Cool This Summer

Was last summer a little too hot for comfort? Did you swear that this year you would have air conditioning?

Before you make a move in any direction, heed a few words of advice from the National Better Heating-Cooling Council.

In the first place remember the maxim from your high school science class: heated air rises, cooled air falls. If you follow this slogan you'll be way ahead of the game.

Install all cooling outlets near the ceiling, and as the cool ir falls to the floor, it will upread comfort all the way down. If you have a ducted heating system, don't try to combine it with cooling, the council warns. Unless the ducts were sized for cooling, the air won't get out fast enough to do much good.

Even if the ducts are large enough, as long as the heating outlets are near the floor, only your ankles will be cool during the summer.

If the cost of a separate overhead air conditioning system is prohibitive, the council suggests other alternatives. Add insulation, especially in the attic. It will keep the warm air out during the summer, and conversely, it will keep the heat inside during the winter.

Room air conditioners are another alternative to a central system. However, get units with good thermostatic controls, and let them run all day. Otherwise, it may take all night to get the temperature down to your comfort level.

An attic fan is a tried and proven way to cool off a hot house. By preventing a heat build-up, it keeps the house more comfortable. Coupled with added insulation, it can work wonders.

And finally, the council suggests you remember another science class slogan: light colors reflect heat, dark colors absorb heat. Install two-sided window shades in rooms facing the sun. Have the light side face outward. It will reflect the rays and heat of the sun.

About CARPETS

By Doug Emerson

LEVEL LOOP CARPETS are very much "in" . . . from commercial installations in your favorite stores and supermarkets to the most luxurious homes.

What is a "level loop" carpet? Well, it can be any carpet with looped rather than cut pile . . . but wide usage today refers to the low, dense level-loop carpets created for especially hard wear as well as moisture and stain-resistance.

Such carpets are often called indoor-outdoor carpeting, with olefin fibers being most popular. The olefin fibers have the great virtue of being completely non-absorbent. Kitchen spills are easily wiped up . . . and outdoor moisture won't affect the carpet.

The versatility of these carpets shouldn't make you think they belong only outdoors or in special rooms like kitchens. There is probably a perfect place for a durable level-loop carpet in some room of almost every home, especially very active rooms like dens, family and recreation rooms.

You'll find these exciting carpet developments in our big display, in beautiful new prints as well as striking colors. It's our business to bring you the best of today's carpets . . . and we'll even bring samples right to your home. Call now!

Do You Really Live In Your Living Room?

A showcase for family occasions and entertaining, the living room traditionally gets a choice view, windows to enjoy it, generous floor plan and a goodly chunk of the decorating budget.

But how much real living goes on there?

This triple-threat arrangement was well illustrated recently in a visit to a home where loft space was used for the master bedroom.

In the main living area, the soaring expanse of a two-story pitched, open beam ceiling is highlighted by flooding natural light from full-length windows. Dark-stained Douglas fir beams are paired under two-by-six inch white pine decking for a dramatic ceiling contrast.

WALLS OF warm-toned vertical grain resawn western wood combine beauty and practicality to set the stage for an active, easy-to-care-for room.

The master bedroom shares the airy, open outlook, with a balcony rail that obstructs neither light nor view. Top and bottom rails are sturdy three-by-sixes and two-by-fours respectively, and major verticals are three-by-fours with one-by-one inch infill.

A container garden on a shallow, sheltered deck outside the windows personalizes the view, and can be changed with the season.

WARMED BY THE fireplace and by the walls of resawn western wood, these children find the corner of this large living room under a bedroom loft a cozy nook. Paired two-by-six-inch beams stained dark, over two-by-six decking, add interest to the high ceiling. A railing extends the open feeling to the bedroom.

Student-Inspired Inside-The Home Ideas

Youth Solves Decorating Problems With Creativity

By CAROLYN S. MURRAY

After one month of working with some students from Woodbury College in Los Angeles, I feel inspired to get "with it" and do something creative around the house.

Watching these design interns paint a wall, whip up draperies, nail blemish-hiding cedar boards to a badly plastered wall surface or install a vinyl floor covering, one feels like Whistler's Mother, sitting and rocking away the precious hours!

The student designer comes up with fresh ideas while the rest of us settle for orthodox solutions to decorating problems.

IN SIX OUT of seven room settings designed by this particular group of young planners, good architectural interest was added to rooms bare of detail. In one case a raised platform, 18 inches high, became the floor for a fireplace grouping. And changing that third of the floor space into a slightly raised sitting area made a tremendous visual change in the otherwise dull room.

The student team chose a stock metal fireplace, covered the hearth in fake-brick tiles and carpeted the rest of the platform, stair treds and risers in deep shag. The steps became additional seating spaces for youngsters playing chess, watching television or toasting marshmallows.

THE OTHER portion of the room contained a tufted love seat and matching sofa for more conventional pursuits.

Designer Bill Lane has also used this raised platform treatment for the living room of a high-rise apartment. His theory is that the whole space, from wall to wall, floor to ceiling, should be used, especially when one must pay such astronomical rent for space in today's high-rise buildings.

ANOTHER IDEA that evolved out of the student project was the use of a picket fence material as a dado for a boy's room. Painted white and raised about eight inches above the floor molding, the fence added a perky touch to an otherwise plain wall.

Two other students converted a boxy room into an unusual octagonal form by creating wedge-shaped closets in each of the four corners of the room. Ready-made shutters, instead of doors, were used on two closets and artificial plants were placed behind and close to the shutters to emulate little gardens.

A SPOTLIGHT in each of these areas helped create the illusion of a real outdoor area in back of the shutters.

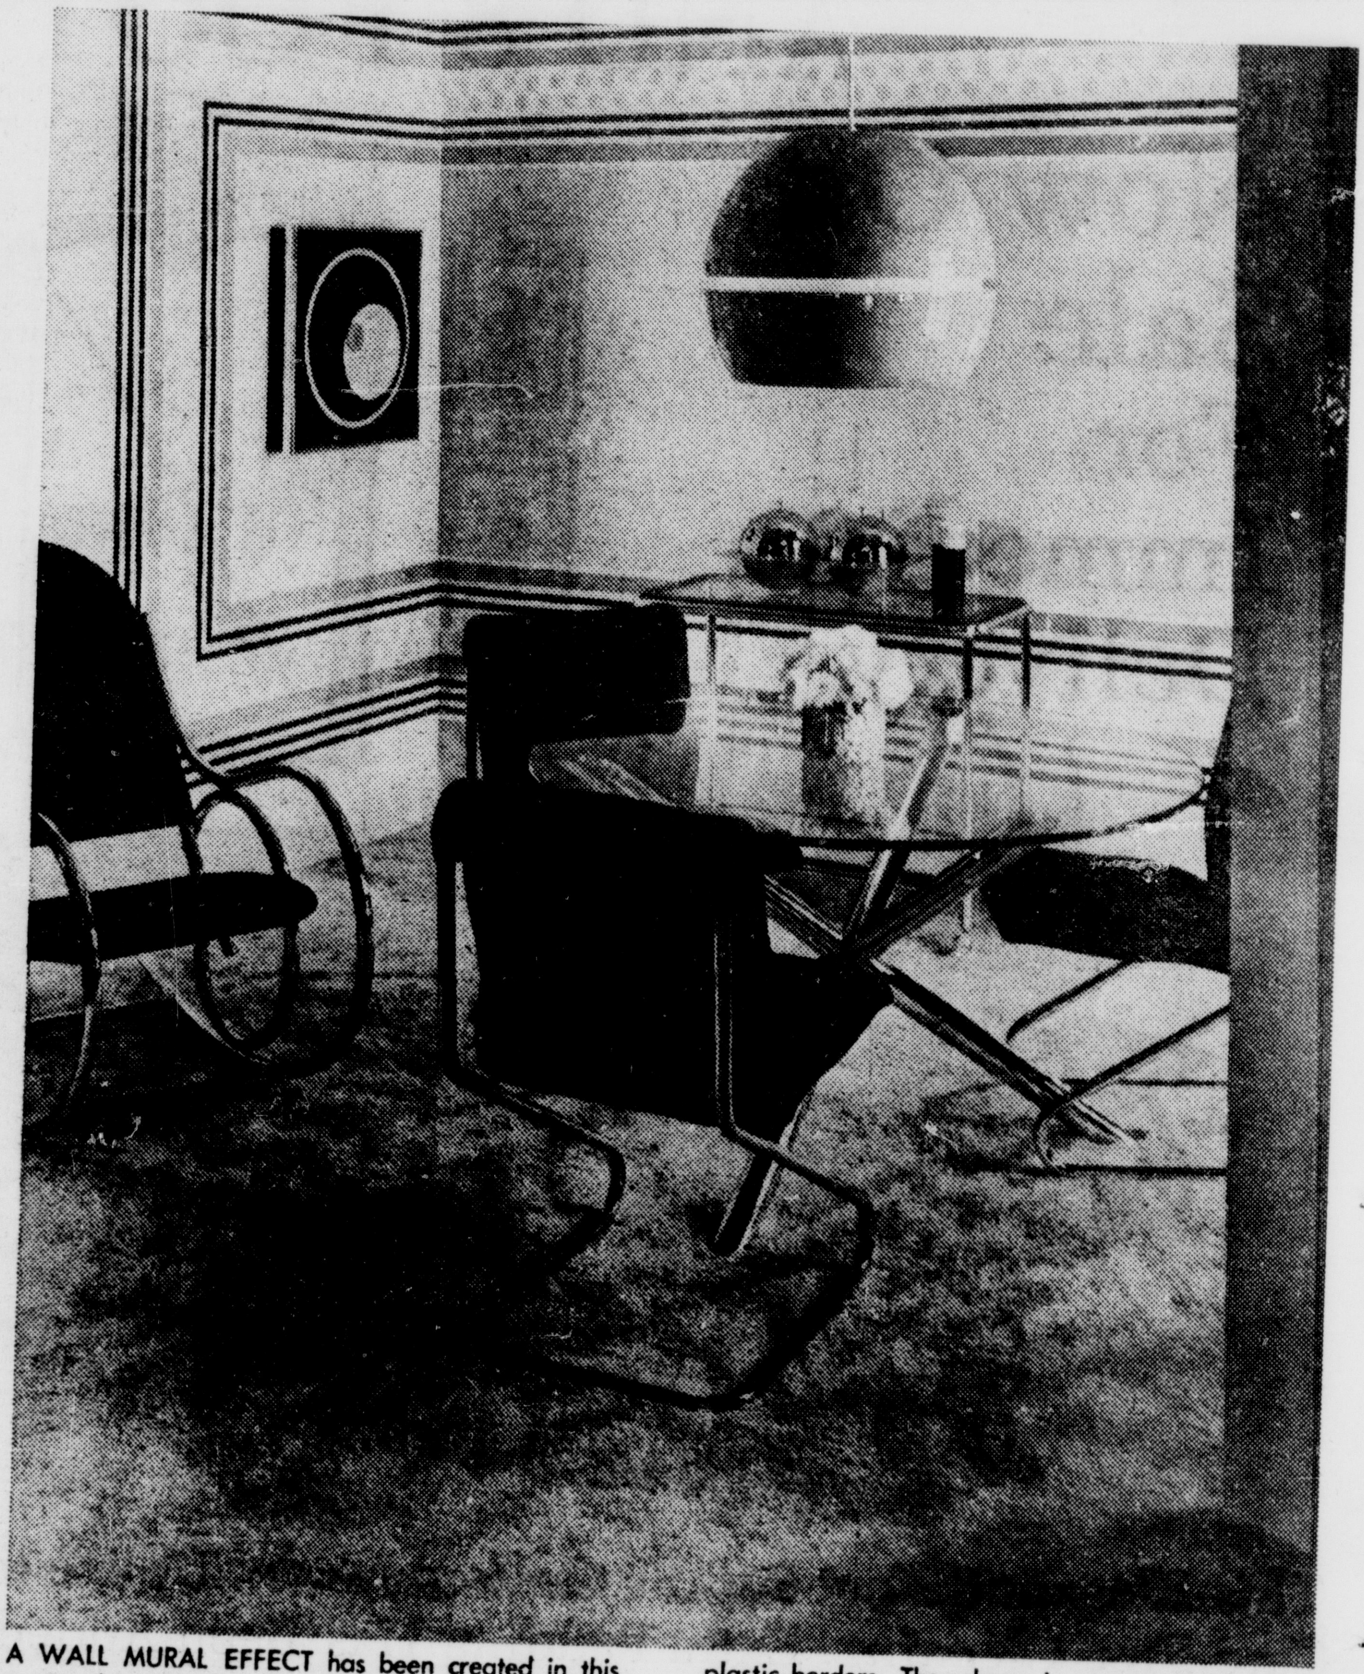
It's a pleasant change from the usual wall groupings of paintings and posters. The patterns are nicely compatible with the handsome floor covering which is a flame-stitch patterned carpet by Monarch made of Enkaloft nylon. It is a nice room for the mobile set as well as for stay-at-homers.



A WALL MURAL EFFECT has been created in this room through the use of colorful self-adhesive plastic borders. The scheme is a sunny yellow, red, black and chrome, as uncluttered as it is eye-catching.

IT'S SEW RIGHT FOR THE SEAMSTRESS

NO MATTER how compact and versatile your portable sewing machine, milady can still use a table that will support it and afford her ample working space. So Steve Ellingson has designed one. For $1 sent to Steve Ellingson, San Rafael Independent-Journal Pattern Department, Post Office Box 2383, Van Nuys, Calif., 91409, the home handyman can obtain Sewing Machine Pattern 347. The directions lead to a table that stretches out to a generous six feet by 20 inches top for working, but shrinks to a compact 20 by 22 inches when not in use. You cut a space out of the table top to fit your specific sewing machine. And by replacing the part that has been sawed out, you have a table that can double for dining or as a desk. There's storage space, too. Two slim cabinets hold thread and other supplies. And the simple project is built principally of inexpensive plywood. All parts are straight cuts, so elaborate tools are not required.

SOVIET UNION PARENTS HAVE TV WORRIES, TOO

By CHARLOTTE SAIKOWSKI

MOSCOW — Soviet children, too, are glued to the television set, and parents and pedagogues are worried.

It's not a concern about excessive blood and gore, however. Soviet television is tightly controlled by the state, and except for the steady diet of war films, Russians see little violence. Sex likewise is kept within chaste bounds.

But even though Soviet programs are saturated with educational and cultural themes, alarms are being sounded that television has a harmful influence on a child's upbringing, distracting him from his studies and group activities.

Among addicted children there is a growing tendency to watch sports events on television and to participate less in outdoor games with their peers. Such viewers also do fewer chores in the home and are reluctant to take part in Young Pioneer and Komsomol activities in the school.

These general findings are reported in a Pravda article by Valentin V. Ksenofontov, a senior researcher in the U.S.S.R. Academy of Pedagogical Sciences. The article suggests that television raises all sorts of problems and conflicts in Soviet families, 50 per cent of whom now own a TV set.

It also indicates that some Russians use television to keep their children off the streets and are not always satisfied with the quality of programs.

"I saved my money," the article quotes one mother as writing, "and bought a television set especially so that while I'm at work my son would not pointlessly chase a football outdoors all day —and with bad children at that —and would acquire some sense. But there are few programs for him and most of them are uninteresting."

Ksenofontov says that scholars have not yet thoroughly researched the effects of television. But the negative influences noted so far are due not so much to the content of programs (which nonetheless could be improved) as to the fact that children view TV indiscriminately.

Parents, he feels, are to blame for the lack of discipline on this question.

The pedagogue is against telling a child what programs he may and may not see, for this simply arouses opposition. Rather, he advises parents to plan television viewing along with a whole range of duties and activities in the home.

Since work is the prime duty of man, he argues, the child should be made to feel that his studies are important to the entire family. Similarly, he should participate in discussion of his parents' job problems so that there is mutual understanding.

"It is clear that when parents respect the work of their child, he will as a rule not be confronted with the dilemma of whether to study or to watch television," writes the author. "The most important thing will be his studies, his civic duty."

Ksenofontov also favors families working out together how they will divide their time as between household chores, public duties, and entertainment and posting monthly and weekly schedules. He also suggests they select programs that suit a child's interest and stimulate his creativity.

Such an approach, he concludes, will save children from "falling captive to the television set."

Remember When There Was Fun?

Remember when there used to be some fun on television — Jackie Gleason, Red Skelton, Art Carney, Jack Benny, Danny Kaye, Sid Caesar, Imogene Coca? Granted they may have worn out their welcomes, but where are the replacements? So far, there have been none.

Quick Comments On A Batch Of Fine New Columbia Classics

By JOHN SUNIER

A large batch of fine classics from Columbia compels us to comment only briefly on a few of them this week.

Albums are now being recorded to fit a title someone has dreamed up, in much the way some recent non-fiction books have come about. "Bach for Band" is the believe-it-or-not title of Columbia album M 31126 featuring The London Symphonic Band conducted by Gerallt Leslie Williams.

The title suggestion was followed in great earnestness, for these pieces are not the rather mouldy-sounding arrangements of Bach for symphonic band from years ago, but spanking new recreations for an ensemble of wind players. The sheer weight and richness of such works as the "Toccata and Fugue in D Minor" or "Sleepers Awake" must be heard to be believed.

A treat for the ears and a unique alternative to Bach-for-Moog, koto, jazz, and all the other recent transmutations.

IN THE AREA of fabulous sound is a new recording of that familiar old pair, Respighi's "Fountains of Rome" and "Pines of Rome," (Columbia M 30829). The great popularity of Eugene Ormandy's version of these Roman "wide-screen soundtracks" has made it possible for Columbia to record the pieces again in 1972-quality stereo, and the result is nothing less than smashing.

Another Ormandy Philadelphia Orchestra entry is Columbia M 31074 with Vaughan Williams' "Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis" and two Elgar works — "The Enigma Variations," and "Cockaigne Overture."

The third volume in Glenn Gould's series of the Mozart piano sonatas is Columbia M 31073, containing the sonatas numbers 8, 10, 12 and 13 in Gould's distinctive harpsichord-like treatments. The articulation is so clean it sounds scrubbed!

Chopin's beautiful "Preludes," all 24 of them, are played by Brazilian pianist Nelson Freire on Columbia M 30486. Freire broke into the concert scene only last year and is already one of the most exciting pianists in the world. Both he and the audio engineers have achieved truly lovely piano sound on the LP.

"Funeral March for a Papagallo and Other Grotesqueries of Alkan" is the title of Romantic-period specialist Raymond Lewenthal's album, M 30234. It comes with a bonus seven-inch LP in which Lewenthal plays and explains the strange piano pieces of this eccentric French composer. Alkan is far too weird to summarize in a few words, but fans of Erik Satie will revel in this music as well.

TWO ORGAN LPs hold interest next: The second volume of "The Magnificent Mr. Handel" features short fanfares, marches, overtures and other pieces from the English composer's operas and oratorios, as performed by E. Power Biggs with the Royal Philharmonic conducted by Charles Groves (Columbia M 31206).
A treat throughout, and sparkling sound as well!

The other organ album is Anthony Newman's latest (M 31127), which spotlights all three of the "Chorales" for organ by Franck, as well as Bach's "Trio Sonata No. 4 in E Minor," and "Fantasy and Fugue on B-A-C-H" by Liszt. Newman's technique is staggering and the sonics on both his harpsichord and organ LPs preserves the brilliant sound.

The "Chorales" have always been favorites of mine and this version is most welcome, showing Newman's taste in the more subtle areas of interpretation.

TELEVISION NOTES

By JACK GAVER

The Disney hour on NBC Sundays is in its 11th year on that network, and plans for its continuance through the 1972-73 and 1973-74 seasons already have been completed. The late Walt Disney first put his products on the home screen in 1954 when ABC was the outlet.

On Sunday CBS will begin another "AAU International Champions" series to be broadcast on 17 Sunday afternoons through Aug. 27 except for a pre-empted date Aug. 20. This is the fourth year for the program which covers a diversified series of Amateur Athletic Union events. Some of the events will consist of Olympic trials for the 1972 games in Munich later this year. Three of the programs will be an hour long, the rest run for 90 minutes.

The ceremonies at which the 24th annual Emmy Awards of the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences will be announced will be telecast from Los Angeles on CBS May 14.

NBC has been awarded exclusive rights to the post-season Senior Bowl football game in Mobile, Ala., through 1975. The network has telecast the contest between top college seniors from the North and South for 15 consecutive years.

The post-season Gator Bowl football game will be televised by the ABC network in 1972, 1973 and 1974.

"Somerset," NCB daytime drama serial, was two years old on March 30. It was spin-off from another NBC serial "Another World," and in its early months was entitled "Another World-Somerset."

Griffin Productions — that would be Merv — has signed singer Leslie Uggams to star in a potential summer replacement series and a batch of specials to be placed in syndication in the fall.

The six singing Osmond Brothers, widely seen on video variety shows for several years, have inspired a new animated series called "The Osmonds" that ABC will air on Saturday mornings beginning in the fall. The story line involves them in a world tour.

May 2 is the date when NBC begins a weekly series of repeated "Bonanza" episodes under the title "Ponderosa." They will be aired at 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays until the fall and will be selected from past years of this 13-year-old series. Through the summer there also will be the usual repeats of this season's "Bonanza" episodes in the regular 9-10 p.m. Sunday period.

SAND

In the walk along the shore
One recalls those memories,
All the joys once found here:
Building castles,
Tantalized by ocean wave,
Knowing it artifact of sand,
Soon would all be gone.

Ship Models Recall The Sea's Majesty

By MARC NURRE

The stress of the open sea, an inanimate force working by influence through the minds and skills of 16th and 17th Century shipbuilders, produced more than seaworthy ships.

It produced functional works of art — works transmitted to the 20th Century mainly through lithographs and faded tintypes, two dimensional forms which struggle in vain to capture genius in three dimensions.

To one old Englishman it must have seemed an inadequate attempt, for though in poor health, he builds two replicas per year of the ships which were the glory of the days of sail.

To support himself, the man sells his creations through a London shop, and when Ray L. Choklat discovered one four years ago, he didn't hesitate.

He bought it and had to carry it gingerly home in his lap as he sat on a jet. He and his wife gave the shopkeeper a standing order: "We told him that we wanted all the old man could produce," said Choklat, who now lives on a yacht in the Sausalito Yacht Harbor.

He recognized the workmanship in that first replica, and has since started a collection of the models of the old man he knows only as T. Bradbury.

Choklat said he has tried without success to learn more of Bradbury, and so far has been able to deal with him only through Hummel LTD., the shop where he bought the first model.

"Well-made models are not a thing you can buy easily," he

Auctioned Yacht Burns On Bay Trip

Less than an hour after it was auctioned in Sausalito for $40,000, the 92-foot yacht Princess Mary was heavily damaged by fire yesterday near Alcatraz Island.

None of the six persons aboard was injured and all were removed by a passing ferry and a Coast Guard cutter.

After battling the blaze for three hours, the Coast Guard towed the damaged 53-year-old yacht to the Alameda Yacht Harbor.

John Maddex, an automobile dealer from Piedmont, had just purchased the boat from the Internal Revenue Service. It was auctioned by IRS to cover a tax lien against the craft's former owners, Guy O. and Beverly Foss of Seattle.

Mddex, who had outbid about a dozen prospective buyers, watched his yacht burn from the deck of a nearby Coast Guard cutter. Five friends were with him on the voyage when the fire broke out about 4 p.m.

"I've had boats for 20 years," he said. "It's not the nicest boat I've ever had, but it was the most classic. I was going to use it opening day of the yachting season."

According to Maddex, the fire began in the exhaust system and spread to the exhaust pipes.

Grip Also Tighter Around Quang Tri

SAIGON (UPI) — North Vietnamese forces concluded the first month of their offensive today by overrunning a district capital on South Vietnam's central coast and tightening their grip on the provincial capitals of Quang Tri and An Loc.

South Vietnamese troops were reported fleeing in the face of the Communist advance, some clinging to the skids of U. S. helicopters moving wounded and supplies.

North Vietnamese forces moved into Bong Son 300 miles north of Saigon, during the day as its battalion of regional militia force defenders fled. Bong Son was the 12th district capital captured in the offensive.

In Quang Tri, the country's northernmost provincial capital, South Vietnamese field officers said government troops had killed at least 150 Communists and knocked out seven tanks in fighting today.

U. S. Air Force and Marine F4 Phantom jets struck Communist positions around Quang Tri, 18 miles south of the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ), during the day but heavy ground fire prevented helicopters from landing at the city.

UPI reporter Edward Bassett, reporting from Qui Nhon, 250 miles north of Saigon, said Bong Son was defended by a battalion of regional militiamen —about 500 men—and were attacked by two battalions of North Vietnamese regulars, 1,000 to 1,200 men.

At Bong Son, five South Vietnamese soldiers jumped aboard a U.S. helicopter that had come to pick up a wounded American adviser. The pilot took off with the five men aboard, but was ordered to drop them off at the South Vietnamese base at Phu Cat. There, the soldiers were placed under arrest.

One U.S. adviser, Maj. Goerge Watson, was bitter about the Bong Son loss. "They (the South Vietnamese) had daisy chains of helicopter gunships, jet fighters and FAC's (Foward Air Controllers)," he

AN LOC

A Prayer For Rescue Helicopters

(Editors: The information from which the following story was written was obtained by UPI in an interview with a freelance reporter-photographer who went into An Loc by helicopter today.

The helicopter he came out on was shot down. He was rescued uninjured. He agreed to be interviewed by UPI on the condition that his identity not be revealed.)

AN LOC, Vietnam (UPI)— The lead helicopter swooped down for the landing pad at the south end of town, still held by South Vietnamese forces but under intense Communist fire.

Just before it was hit by antiaircraft fire, the pilots and eight tense South Vietnamese infantrymen spotted the 200 soldiers, many of them wounded, crowding the edge of the pad.

Standing, and on bended knees, they clasped their hands in front of them, begging the pilot to land and carry them out of An Loc.

To call An Loc "the battered provincial capital, 60 miles north of Saigon" is the understatement of the war. To its besieged defenders, holding the city on direct orders from President Nguyen Van Thieu, it is quite simply hell.

The Communists control all of the northern half of the town —or what remains after hundreds of air strikes—part of the southern half and most of the surrounding rubber plantation.

South Vietnamese troops control two small military compounds and the ground they stand on atop a few rolling hills overlooking An Loc.

Both sides claim their flag flies over An Loc and both are right.

Since April 7, the South Vietnamese have held their tiny plot of ground on An Loc's southern edge against tank, human wave and shelling assaults.

The troops have been unable to get out. Reinforcements are landed miles away and sometimes fight their way through to the town to take the places of

AN ASSESSMENT

Wallace: New Spoiling Role?

By GODFREY SPERLING, JR.
The Christian Science Monitor News Service

WASHINGTON — Senator Edmund S. Muskie is now out of contention in the primaries. But his withdrawal does little to change what already was shaping up as primarily a two-man, Humphrey-McGovern battle, with George Wallace providing a certain amount of harassing action.

In fact, Muskie already had receded from the scene before he admitted it formally.

In a new assessment of key primary states — from Monitor writers stationed there — it comes through vividly that Wallace could well do some more spoiling in the very near future.

Wallace, who helped send Muskie on the decline in Florida, Wisconsin, and Pennsylvania, seems set to give Sen. Hubert Humphrey all kinds of trouble in Indiana, West Virginia, Michigan, Nebraska.

And in North Carolina, Wallace is running neck and neck with former Gov. Terry Sanford, seen by some to be a stand-in for Humphrey.

Sen. George McGovern, too, might be hurt by Wallace, in Nebraska and Michigan.

But up to now the Wallace damage has been mainly to the more conservative or centrist candidate.

Thus Humphrey, who has taken the center position previously occupied by Muskie, stands to be the more likely loser from strong Wallace performances.

All this, it appears, means that McGovern has the easier road between now and the final big primaries in Oregon, California and New York.

And in two of these — Oregon and New York — Monitor writers see McGovern already in the lead. In California Hubert Humphrey is given the current edge, but McGovern appears to be coming up fast.

All this means, too, that McGovern, as of now, seems to have the best chance of going into the convention with the most delegates.

However, should Humphrey be able to overcome Wallace — which Muskie was not able to do — the Minnesota senator may be able to pick up the kind of momentum that will strengthen his positions in later primaries.

Humphrey does appear to be off to a good start. Ohio, as of now, appears to be his, although McGovern again, is making fast progress there as he intensifies his campaign in that state.

The word from Ohio about Wallace is interesting, however: "Were he on the ballot he might win here."

But Humphrey does butt heads with Wallace in Indiana this week. As of now, the Monitor assessment is calling the race for the governor, but says Humphrey has gained momentum from the Pennsylvania vic-

WIRE NEWS BRIEFS From Everywhere

Lindsay to Lennons' Aid

Lennon

NEW YORK (UPI) —Mayor John Lindsay has come to the aid of ex-Beatle John Lennon and his artist wife Yoko Ono who are being threatened with deportatiion because of Lennon's conviction on marijuana charges in England.

Lindsay, in a letter to the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, asked that the Lennons be allowed to remain in this country and be granted resident status in New York.

A deportation hearing for the Lennons is scheduled for Tuesday. Lennon, a British subject, is unable to renew his visa because of the conviction four years ago. But he said Friday the government's action stems from his anti-Vietnam war stands.

Lindsay said it was "very much in the public interest" for the Lennons to be allowed to remain in New York. The mayor added that the deportation attempt is "a grave injustice" and "cruel treatment."

In a Friday news conference in Washington, Lennon said he wanted to remain in New York. "We love it," he said. His wife chimed in: "We feel we're being kicked out of our town."

Miss Ono said that if they are deported she will lose custody of her 8-year-old daughter by another marriage. Last month a Houston court granted custody of the child to the Lennons provided they raise the her in the United States.

Strife In Spain

MADRID (UPI) — Spanish news media today reported mounting labor and student unrest as the result of a call by left wing underground organizations to mark May 1 with a wave of protest against the rightwing government of Generalisimo Francisco Franco.

Three of Spain's biggest universities were closed this week because of student unrest. Scattered strikes and demonstrations involving thousands of persons were reported by the nation's two major wire services in Madrid, Barcelona and other cities. The reports said arrests were made, but did not specify their number.

45 Years Later

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — An elderly transient who said the killing of a Los Angeles police officer 45 years ago has "haunted" him ever since was convicted of first degree murder yesterday.

The defendant, Matthew Kilgariff, 67, was arrested on a "mental case" disturbance call last October and later admitted to police the 1927 slaying of officer Parley Bennett during a robbery.

A Blessing?

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Los Angeles Mayor Sam Yorty said yesterday San Diego's anticipated loss of the Republican convention to Miami Beach might be a "blessing in disguise."

Yorty told newsmen in San Diego that if the convention had been held here the city might have lost a lot of the regular tourist business that could never have been recaptured. He said that was the reason he didn't push to have the convention in Los Angeles.

Moon Birth Seen

TULLAHOMA, Tenn. (UPI) — This century will see the first child born on the moon, Dr. Wernher von Braun predicted yesterday.

"What with women's lib and all that, we will probably have love affairs and I predict that the first child will be born on the moon before the year 2000," said von Braun, a high official of the space agency.

Von Braun, who has been called the father of the U.S. space program, spoke to the National Congress on Aerospace Education at the University of Tennessee Space Institute.

Working Visit

MOSCOW (UPI) — President Anwar Sadat of Egypt today concluded a quick working visit in which he and Soviet leaders conferred for nearly six hours on Middle East strategy.

Arab sources said Sadat planned to leave for home today following a final chat in the Kremlin with Soviet Communist leader Leonid I. Brezhnev.

Connally To Play Host To President Tomorrow

In the midst of a three-day Florida vacation, Nixon took an unexpected side trip yesterday to Grand Cay, the private island in the Bahamas owned by longtime friend Robert Abplanlap.

It was a change of scenery, but more relaxation for the President who took a quick swim in the choppy seas after arrival, and then had a leisurely dinner with his host Abplanlap and his Florida neighbor C. G. "Bebe" Rebozo.

A briefcase of presidential papers was nearby.

Nixon was expected to return to Key Biscayne by helicopter later today. Then tomorrow the president flies to Texas for a reception and dinner at Connally's Picosa ranch at Floresville, 40 miles outside of San Antonio.

Connally has invited about 200 friends to meet his boss. The guest list was not released in advance, but the names were sure to include influential political and business figures, persons whose support would be invaluable in capturing the state's 26 electoral votes in November.

Sources close to the former Texas governor, who is a Democrat, downplayed the significance of the dinner, calling it merely an example of Texas hospitality. But the invitation has revived speculation that Connally would be a likely running mate for Nixon this fall if Vice President Spiro Agnew chooses to step aside.

Despite earlier speculation, the White House said Nixon would not visit former President Lyndon B. Johnson during his Texas stop. The LBJ Ranch where Johnson is recuperating from a serious heart attack, is only 80 miles away from Connally's home.

But while White House officials said the President's schedule would not permit a personal visit with Johnson, they indicated Nixon would likely telephone his best wishes to Johnson for a speedy recovery.

'Planet X' Discovery Predicted

LIVERMORE, Calif. (UPI)—Discovery of a "planet X," nearly 6 billion miles from Earth on the border of the Milky Way, has been predicted by scientists at the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory.

The planet is far beyond Pluto, which is currently the farthest away of the nine known planets of the solar system. In its huge orbit, "planet X" takes 600 years to complete one revolution around the sun, said Joseph L. Brady, a Lawrence mathematician and an authority on Halley's Comet.

Brady and his colleagues used sophisticated mathematical computations of the movements of Halley's Comet dating back to before Christ to determine existance of "planet X."

COMPUTER USED

Brady, Edna M. Carpenter and Francis H. McMahon, said in the journal of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific that they used a computer to process mathematical observations of the strange deviations in Halley's Comet going back to biblical times.

Existence of the mysterious 10th plane had been predicted before, but Brady is the first to predict its orbit, mass and position, Lawrence officials said.

The planet is about 65 times as far from the Sun as Earth, which is about 93 million miles away. Its size and location account for mysterious deviations in the orbit of Halley's Comet, Brady said.

Calculations indicate "planet X" also accounts for deviations in the orbits of two other reappearing comets, Olbers and Pons-Brooks, he said.

IS NOT NEW

Prediction of unseen planets is not new. The location of Neptune was predicted in 1846 on the basis of deviations in the orbit of Uranus. Deviations in Neptune's orbit led to a prediction of Pluto's location in 1915.

Since its discovery in 1930, Pluto has been observed through less than one-fourth of its revolution around the sun and a complete picture of its orbit is not available.

Brady said "planet X" may be as elusive as Pluto was a half century ago. It took 15 years to find it from the time of its prediction.

Brandt Says Pacts Hold Wall's Future

BERLIN (UPI)—West German Chancellor Willy Brandt, seeking public support for his threatened regime, told an estimated 50,000 persons at a rally today that if his nonaggression pacts with Russia and Poland are not ratified, East Germany would close the Berlin Wall again.

"There is an inseparable connection between the pacts and Berlin," Brandt told the crowd outside City Hall. "You cannot have the one without the other. The Bundestag (Parliament) will have to consider this in all seriousness. No one will be able to ignore the connection."

The East Germans have already said they will lessen restrictions on traffic between the divided Berlins but warned such a move would be contingent on ratification of the 1970 accords.

Thursday, Brandt survived by a scant two ballots a parliamentary no confidence vote. The opposition called for the vote, claiming the accords Brandt worked out with the Big Four ambassadors contained West German concessions that got nothing in return.

The chancellor ran into more trouble Friday when he lost a crucial vote in Parliament on the proposed budget for his own office. Brandt went to the people today in the first of a series of May Day weekend appearances to muster support for his troubled government.

At a news conference in Berlin today, both Brandt and Foreign Minister Walter Scheel expressed confidence the pacts would be ratified. They said they saw prospects of the opposition breaking party ranks and voting with the coalition.

The 58-year-old chancellor also planned an appearance in the heavily populated Ruhr industrial area tomorrow and another on Monday, Europe's May Day holiday.

High Wire Performer Takes Fall

A spokesman for the show said Daniel Acosta, a native of Colombia, South America, was unconscious when he was taken from the stage to a hospital. He lost both blood and teeth in the fall to the stage at the Oakland Coliseum.

Acosta was in fair condition at San Leandro Memorial Hospital where he was taken by Kelly, the dancer who is producing and directing the show. A hospital spokesman said Acosta, 26, apparently did not suffer internal injuries but "had facial lacerations and a facial fracture."

A gasp went up from the audience of 6,000, including hundreds of children, when Acosta leap frogged over his partner, hit the wire and dropped to the stage.

The spokesman said Acosta and his partner, Pedro Carrillo, had been doing the act for a number of years and this was the first accident.

He said the timing of the two was apparently off in the segment of the act in which Acosta, dressed in a Charlie Chaplin outfit, jumps over the back of Carrillo, acting as a Keystone Cop.

The show, which opened here Thursday in the start of a national tour, went on after Acosta was taken to the hospital.

McGovern Goes After The Blue Collar Vote

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

Sen. George S. McGovern, certain that he has locked up liberals and peace voters, is now trying to contest Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey's strength among blue collar workers in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

McGovern stumped through industrialized northern Ohio yesterday visiting Otis Elevator Co. and Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co. factories before meeting workers at Chevrolet's Vega plant.

Humphrey divided his time between Ohio, where he challenges McGovern, and neighboring Indiana, where he faces Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace.

Both states hold primaries Tuesday.

Wallace swung through North Carolina, telling a rally from a pickup truck's bed that "We're rebelling against the leadership that has looked down their nose at you," and Tennessee, which votes Thursday in a primary with Wallace a heavy favorite.

"They better treat me right because they can't win without me," Wallace said from behind a red, white and blue banner in Chattanooga before leaving for Indiana.

Dole said McGovern, Humphrey and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy have a "curious willingness to find fault without first finding alternatives, to criticize without first proposing something better, to speak, in other words, without first thinking."

Humphrey in Cleveland said he favors federal tax credits for parents of parochial and private school children. In Fort Wayne and Indianapolis, Humphrey spoke on a variety of subjects ranging from J. Edgar Hoover to world peace.

McGovern said in Cleveland that he had never encountered so much support for Wallace, and told Otis Elevator workers that "the murder rate in Alabama is as bad as it is in most other states."

McGovern also told The Washington Post in an interview that he would alter his campaign to try to appeal more to blue collar workers and Democratic state leaders. He said there was some concern among the "purists" in his camp, but that he felt his base of support must be broadened.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, also in Ohio, renewed his attacks on McGovern, calling him an appeaser.

Rep. Shirley Chisholm visited the shrine of a 19th Century black woman activist, Sojourner Truth.

"The battle is still going on," Mrs. Chisholm said in Battle Creek, Mich.

Apollo Team Will Arrive Home Today

ABOARD USS TICONDEROGA (UPI)—Apollo 16 astronauts John W. Young, Charles M. Duke and Thomas K. (Ken) Mattingly return to United States soil today after a 1.4 million mile voyage they hope unlocked the secrets of the moon.

The astronauts were to leave the prime recovery ship USS Ticonderoga by helicopter about noon today EST for Honolulu where they and part of the 245 pounds of rock samples collected during man's only scheduled visit to the moon's mysterious highlands are transferred to a C141 Air Force jet transport for the return to Houston.

The space pilots, the next-to-last Apollo moon flight crew, were scheduled to arrive at Ellington Air Force Base on the edge of the Manned Spacecraft Center about 9:45 p.m. EST.

ROCKS FLIGHT

Another portion of the rocks which scientists think may contain traces of the original lunar crust and give them leads to the formation of both the Earth and the moon will arrive at the space center about 4:30 p.m. EST today aboard a separate aircraft.

The astronauts returned from an 11-day mission in apparently better physical shape than any past team of lunar explorers, Dr. Charles Berry, the space agency's medical director, said Friday in Houston.

Young, Mattingly and Duke splashed down almost precisely on target 1,519 miles south of Hawaii Thursday and Young said the recovery operation was "super."

MEDICAL TESTS

The astronauts underwent extensive medical tests and had to skip the traditional Navy feast for returning spacemen because doctors want to keep their diet similar to the food they ate in space until the medical tests are completed.

The astronauts were having less difficulty in readjusting to the gravity of earth than the Apollo 15 crew did last summer. Their only apparent post-flight medical problems came from skin irritations where medical sensors were attached during the mission and a minor plugging of Young's ears during re-entry.

BLOOD DRAINED

GI Without Life For 10 Minutes

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (UPI)—For 10 minutes last month S. Sgt. Tors Olson lay on a surgical table without a heartbeat and without a drop of blood in his body.

Yesterday the 20-year-old Laurens, N.Y., native explained to newsmen what it was like to have six quarts of blood—none of it his own—circulating through his body.

"I feel pretty good now," Olson said. "I feel thankful to the Lord and closer to God."

According to Air Force doctors, Olson is the first person to have undergone successfully "total body perfusion"—total replacement of a patient's diseased blood with fresh donor blood after washing out his er wcirculatory system with a cleansing solution.

The procedure was performed at Wilford Hall Air Force Medical Center in San Antonio March 31 under a surgical team headed by Dr. (Col.) Gerald Klebanoff. Klebanoff described the total exchange of blood as a "last ditch" effort to save the sergeant's life.

In the procedure he used, all the blood is removed and replaced by a saline solution which washes the blood vessels clean after eight to 10 minutes in what Klebanoff called "suspended animation"—without any blood and with the heart stopped completely.

Olson had lapsed into a deep hepatitis-induced coma several days prior to the operation. He underwent the operation or Good Friday and on Easter Sunday he was awake and relatively clearheaded.

"I recognized my mother and father and I sang a couple of hymns," he said.

Dr. David Langdon, chief of the gastro-enterology section at the medical center, said the procedure used on Olson was applicable in cases of "dire liver coma of a great variety of cases."

"We have not cured the liver disease," he cautioned. "We have only given a patient a better environment in which to combat the disease . . . washing the toxins out of his blood."

The procedure differs from blood transfusions frequently given new-born babies in that those transfusions essentially dilute the toxic factors in the bloodstream, Klebanoff said.

"In a very real sense, the patient was in suspended animation — totally bloodless and cooled to approximately 85 degrees Fahrenheit," Klebanoff said. "The refrigeration of the body was necessary to protect his brain and vital organs from deterioration in the bloodless state."

The doctor said six quarts of fresh, undiseased blood was then pumped back into the patient. The use of the saline solution also allowed the liver to regenerate enough to resume its blood filtering job, doctors said.

The surgeons described the procedure as a relatively simple technique but that it had not been used before because there had been little laboratory experience with it and that it was still experimental. The procedure takes about 15 minutes in its entirety, doctors said.

NLRB Orders Bank Election

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—The National Labor Relations Board in a 4 to 1 decision, has ordered union representation elections in Bank of America branches in Walnut Creek and Alamo.

It will be the first time in the bank's history that separate elections have been held in individual bank branches.

Bank officials said no appeal will be made on the NLRB order and that the bank will abide by the results of the elections.

The elections were ordered to be held within 30 days. Bank officials had argued against union representation at individual branches.

FALL OPENING

New Sears Store Is Taking Shape

The new $4 million Sears Roebuck department store and automotive center is rapidly taking shape on the last 10 acres of open space available at Northgate Shopping Center, with opening date set for early fall, possibly September.

"It will be larger than the Geary Street store in San Francisco and one of the largest on the Pacific Coast," said Philo K. Holland Jr., public relations director for Sears.

Sears at Northgate will have a gross floor area of 225,000 square feet, including a separate automotive center with 19 car stalls and a gasoline island. This is considerably larger than the 188,868 square feet in the Sears store on Geary Street in San Francisco.

The Geary store has 740 parking spaces to 700 for Northgate Sears. However, this is not a fair comparison, Holland explained, because the Northgate Shopping Center will have a total of 3,023 stalls including the Sears area. Total parking capacity is therefore much bigger than at the Geary Street store.

Unlike most of the other Sears stores, which have flat walls and the square look, the Northgate Sears building has been designed with angled walls and indentations to break up the massive brick wall with ceramic tile trim. The roof will be of concrete tile.

The main building will have two stories and a basement. To the east (near Los Ranchitos Road) will be the automotive center and the gasoline island. To the west will be another building for seasonal sales of items like garden and nursery supplies.

M and T Inc., of San Francisco, owners of the 45-acre Northgate Shopping Center, leased the last 10 acres at the south end of the Mall to Sears Roebuck. Sears is putting up its own buildings.

General contractor is Williams and Burrows of Belmont, and the architects are Parkin Architects, Engineers, and Planners of Los Angeles. Project engineers are Simpson, Stratta and Associates of San Francisco. Construction, which started last June, is on schedule and is about 70 per cent complete.

Sears' first retail outlet into Marin County is expected to draw other smaller retail shops into The Mall at Northgate. In the past few months, about ten new shops have leased space in two new buildings that are under construction between the Sears buildings and the former City of Paris building.

The Mall, which includes the Emporium, Roos-Atkins and about 40 other stores, has gross sales of about $20 million annually. This is expected to increase by at least another 50 per cent when Sears and the other stores open up this fall.

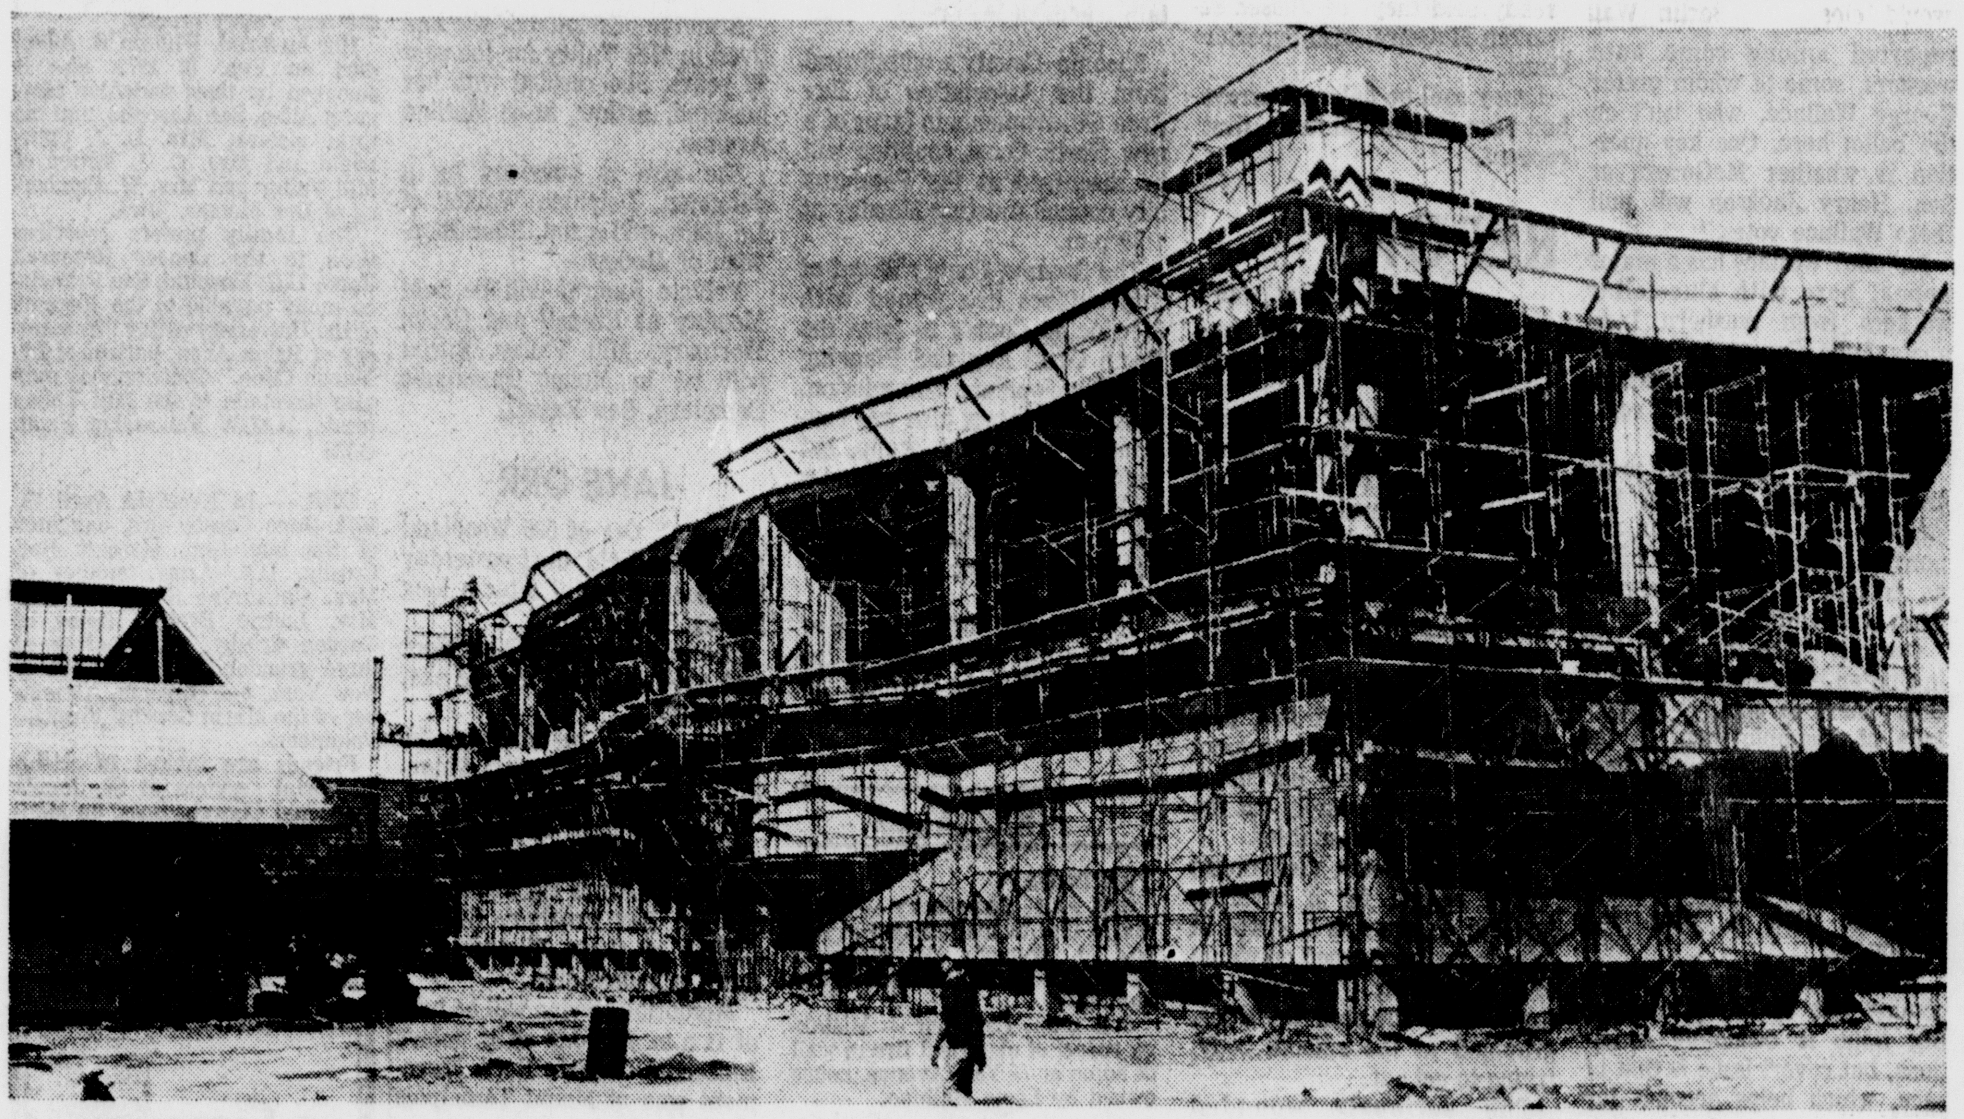
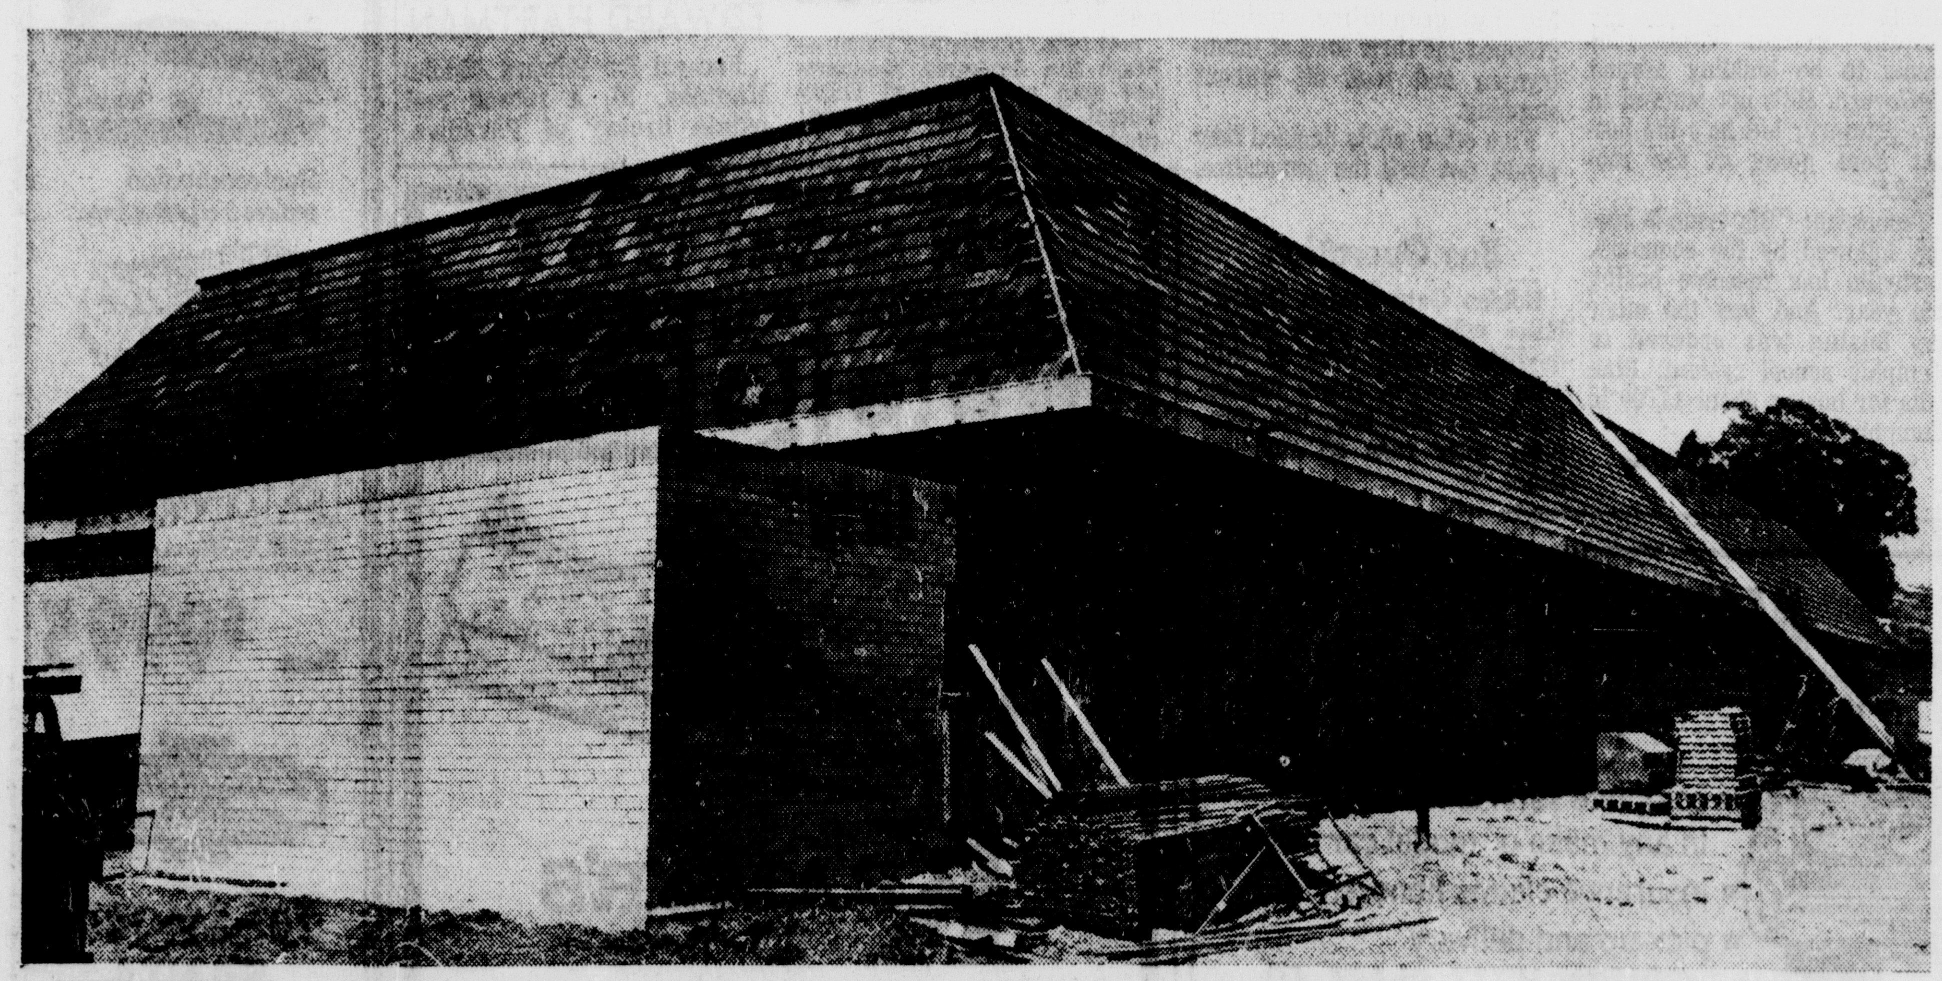
NEW LOOK — Sears' new store at the south end of The Mall at Northgate will look like this when completed this fall. Parkin Architects, Engineers and Planners of Los Angeles did away with the massive flat walls that characterize some of the other Sears stores.



GOING UP — Web of scaffolding surrounds the giant new structure that will be become Sears' first Marin County retail outlet, at The Mall in Northgate. The two-story structure with basement, and separate buildings for seasonal sales (left) and the automotive center (not shown) will be larger than Sears' Geary Street store in San Francisco.



AUTOMOTIVE CENTER — Sears' new automotive building at the corner of Northgate Drive and Los Ranchitos Road will have 19 automobile stalls and a gasoline island. Walls are of brick and ceramic tile, and the concrete tile roof is in keeping with the rest of Northgate Mall.

Award Of Mert To The Pacific Sun

The Pacific Sun, a weekly magazine in Marin County, has won an Award of Merit from the California chapter of the American Institute of Planners for its series of articles entitled, "Environment Marin."

The awards jury noted that the series "communicated important environmental issues in Marin County to its citizens."

36-Unit Condominium In Cotati Is Approved

Plans for 36-unit condominium apartments were approved Thursday night by the Cotati Planning Commission.

Forhim Corp. presented plans for the condominiums which will be built near the Holiday Park subdivision. Planners heard that the 36 units will be part of an 80-unit development, the remainder of which will be in adjacent land in Rohnert Park.

Commissioner secretary Carol Bonfigli said the plans also included a swimming pool and recreation center.

The Cotati Planning Commission also:

APARTMENTS — Approved the first section of a 74-unit apartment complex planned by Joseph Green at East Cotati Avenue and Charles Street. The development will be done in four phases.

TOWNHOUSES — Approved plans by commissioner Pablo Ronquillo for two townhouse units and two duplexes on East Sierra Avenue.

COMMITTEE — Named Ronquillo to represent the commission on the coordinating committee with the Cotati School District.

Licensed Drivers

DETROIT (UPI) —Licensed auto drivers in the United States now total nearly 116 million, the Federal Highway Administration estimates. The record number of 115,800,000 drivers is greater than the 1920 total U.S. population, which was 105,710,000.

The payments aren't very big, either.

Just a $294. cash down payment and $62.06 a month for 36 months. (If you're not too good at math, that works out to a deferred payment price of $2528.16 which includes a finance charge at an ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE of 9.31%)

It uses about 5 pints of oil instead of 5 quarts.

It doesn't need antifreeze because the engine's air-cooled.

And although it does need gas, it doesn't need much of it 'usually a gallon every 25 miles or so.

Of course, you might be the kind that likes to pay cash for everything. In that case, the cash price is $2236.70.

NOW HOW DO WE GET IT OUT OF HERE?

An overturned car and a crushed deck, as viewed by two firemen, were the aftermath yesterday of a bizarre mishap in Tamalpais Valley. Vernon D. Nestel, 52, told the California Highway Patrol he was parking his auto on the carport above his home at 6:20 p.m. when the accelerator got stuck. The car shot off the carport, chopped two chimneys off the roof of the house, then dropped upside down onto a deck, which collapsed and dropped the car to the ground behind the house at 147 California Avenue. A pain in his elbow apparently was Nestel's only injury.

DREAM COMES TRUE

A Stroll Through Giant Boat Show

By BRUCE MARTIN

You walk through the double doors and into the yawning Veterans Memorial Building at the Civic Center. Inside, the first Marin Sports Show under way in bustling fashion.

Scores of people are milling around and placards on more than two dozen booths extol everything from snowshoes to seashells.

The sports show — mainly the result of a lot of work by 20-year-old Terry C. Halbert of San Anselmo — closes out its four-day run today and tomorrow. Hours are 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.

"We're hoping at least 60,000 people will show up," Halbert said. "We've got exhibits for everything in outdoor sports."

Just about everything. There are sailboats draped with hundreds of multicolored flags whose sails tower 40 feet.

There is a "mountaineering-backpacking" booth displaying a variety of ropes, picks, boots — and even snowshoes.

And a national parks exhibit declares the beauties of Yellowstone and Point Reyes National Seashore. Nearby, polished-smooth rocks and seashells from various parks are displayed in a delicate glass case.

There are exhibits of chromed-up custom motorcycles, of ski gear, of giant sail-surfboards, and — perched just outside the 80-by-150-foot exhibit room — a spanking new Piper two-seater aircraft.

Off to one side of the carnival area are a pair of metal towers — 30 and 60 feet in height — where the San Anselmo Ascenders, composed of members of Explorer Post 15, show off their climbing talents each day.

Halbert, the show's executive director, said the show has been two years in the planning by the post. It was almost held last year, he said, but a last-minute decision by county supervisors canceled the show due to a lack of facilities at the Civic Center. Since then, the Veterans Memorial Building has opened and the show was approved.

Cost of the show to the post has been about $10,000 with almost half that figure going toward rental of the building and grounds, Halbert said. The money was raised by the post and through donations by Halbert's father, Clayton.

Some costs were saved, young Halbert said, through the donation of outhouses by a local rental agency and by free electrical work from another firm.

Hie letters solicited about $2,400 in booth-advertising to help offset costs, Halbert said.

Innocent Plea To Bomb; Bail Zooms

A 21-year-old San Francisco man accused of trying to take a bomb into the almost-completed county fire house and sheriff's substation in Marin City, pleaded innocent yesterday, then listened quietly as his bail skyrocketed to $100,000.

Eddie Lee Griffin, also known as Frisco Eddie, first denied in Marin Municipal Court that he had gone to the new structure Thursday with a bomb and a .38-caliber pistol. Then, through his attorney, he tried to have his bail reduced from $25,000.

"If the defendant were prepared today to meet a bail of $25,000, I'd raise it. I'd raise it right now," Judge Peter Allen Smith said. The judge then upped bail to $100,000, although Griffin's attorney said his client could not even meet the lower sum.

The judge set a preliminary hearing in the case for Thursday.

Griffin was described by Deputy Dist. Atty. Kathryn D. Mitchell as a former Black Panther and at present a member of the Black Liberation Army. He apparently has no previous criminal record.

Sheriff's officials said the bomb attempt was thwarted by a deputy guarding the building. County supervisors in February ordered the structure watched because of rumors it would be burned.

The deputy said he caught Griffin crawling into a heater vent about 9 p.m. and made him carry the bomb away from the station. It went off about 10:45 p.m., harmlessly, making a series of about 40 pistol-like reports.

San Francisco police said the gun found on Griffin was stolen during an assault on a special policeman Sept. 9.

Pot Charge Is Reduced

Acting on the heels of a preliminary hearing, Judge Peter Allen Smith reduced the charge. The woman was arrested with two young men on a San Rafael hillside Feb. 15 when police saw one of them toss away a corn cob pipe.

A plastic bag containing pot and another pipe were found in Miss Gardiner's purse, police said. Her companions were charged only with misdemeanors.

Zen Center Buys Part Of Ranch

The San Francisco Zen Center, a religious organization plans to turn 70 acres of the Green Gulch Ranch near Muir Beach into an organic vegetable farm and public conference center.

Huey D. Johnson of Mill Valley, western regional director of the Nature Conservancy, which owns the rest of the 610-acre ranch, said today the Zen Center's plans were "a perfect use" of the lush flatlands of the ranch. The conservancy, which owns the uplands of the ranch, will retain all development rights on the flatlands as well, he said.

The conservancy holding was donated the land last year by the owner of the ranch, George Wheelwright III. He now lives on a ranch on the California-Nevada border.

Johnson said the sale to the Zen Center, now in escrow, will include the ranch house, which he used to house about 12 farm workers and accommodate small conferences. "It will be a place where people could meet peacefully," Johnson said.

The same 70 acres were offered last year for sale to the Tamalpais High School District as a nature study center, but the district rejected the purchase.

Johnson said the sale to the Zen Center will meet Wheelwright's desire to see the flatland maintained as a farm.

The Zen Center also owns property in San Francisco and Tassajara Hot Springs in Carmel Valley.

said. But he said once the Communist troops had entered the town, air strikes were no longer possible because of the risk of inflicting heavy casualties on the civilian population.

Bong Son had been under heavy attack for three days. It was the 12th district town to fall to the Communists in the offensive that will be one month old Sunday, and the second in Binh Dinh Province, long the most rebellion-ridden of South Vietnam's 44 provinces. Hoai An, six miles to the south, fell 10 days ago.

Watson radioed for a helicopter to pick him up. Two choppers arrived and he sent off his Vietnamese scouts and interpreters on the first. He took off in the second.

tory and might score a come-from-behind win.

As of now, Wallace is out in front in Michigan, where the busing issue is, according to one writer, "reaching the point of hysteria."

Tennessee, too, is called "all Wallace." All the other candidates have written this state off to the Alabama governor save for Shirley Chisholm.

Wallace is called the "sleeper" in Nebraska. Humphrey is ahead, but with McGovern moving up fast.

All this adds up to the growing possibility that Wallace may in fact be right about his glowing prospects in the primaries — and that he will be able to exert powerful leverage at the convention.

From the Monitor writers come the following comments:

Ohio: "There is grumbling reported among some auto workers, some of whom prefer George Wallace, who isn't on the ballot here. One key question is whether McGovern or Sen. Henry Jackson will pull these Wallace votes."

Indiana: Wallace has a major appeal here with blue-collar workers from northern Indiana's Lake County as well as from farmers and trades people from small towns and rural areas."

California: "Humphrey probably out front now. He has support of organized labor, minorities, senior citizens, as well as certain backlog of credits from past campaigns."

Oregon: "The big issue still in Oregon is the economic situation. There is six-plus percentage of unemployment in the state, and unemployed workers in Seattle are coming south."

New York: "While taxes and economy are big issues, war having revival of interest here. This is also a plus for McGovern."

Maryland: "No new issue coming out of the primaries. Big issue is economic conditions, but covert issue is that of race, which helps account for large expected vote for Wallace."

Tennessee: "Big issue is busing, followed by the economy. Nashville has massive busing this year. And just the other day busing was ordered in Memphis school system. Plan calls for busing about 14,000 in Memphis."

Three-Hour Ordeal In Drain Pipe

A 21-year-old man, apparently under the influence of drugs, was trapped underground for three hours yesterday in Rohnert Park after he crawled into a 14-inch drainage pipe "to escape society and have peace of mind."

Members of the town's fire and public works departments freed the man by digging a trench and removing a 12-foot section of the pipe.

The man, Wayne L. Caseay, Santa Rosa was covered with mud when he was pried loose from the pipe. Caseay was taken to Santa Rosa Community Hospital for treatment.

According to police, Caseay said he had taken a substance referred to as orange sunshine acid the previous night and crawled into the pipe when he "became afraid" of himself.

The recovery operation began when screams for help were heard underground near 201 Alden Avenue.

A public works department official descended into the nearest manhole, 75 feet from Caseay, and tried to pull him out, but the man was too weak to hang onto a garden hose extended by the rescuer.

A tractor with a back hoe was summoned to the scene. At 6:50 p.m., after three hours of digging, a section of pipe was lifted from the trench and cracked open, freeing Caseay.

A Recount Of Recount Is Looming

A recount of the recount loomed in the contested Corte Madera City Council race yesterday as one of the candidates went to court over the matter.

Herber C. Leney, now locked in a tie with incumbent Robert P. Simmons in the wake of the April 11 election, asked Judge Henry J. Broderick of Marin Superior Court to order a new recount.

Broderick complied with Leney's request, and set the second recount for 2 p.m. May 15 in the courtroom of Judge E. Warren McGuire, also Superior Court.

Leney said he believed errors had been committed in the first recount.

Helicopters today made the first try in two weeks at taking troops into An Loc. Even the 96 soldiers they carried would be welcomed by the defenders.

The wounded and the shellshocked prayed the helicopters would come in so they could be carried away.

One helicopter was hit, perhaps by antiaircraft fire, perhaps by one of dozens of snipers in trees around the helicopter pad. It dropped heavily but the crash caused no casualties.

A score of South Vietnamese troops rushed for a covering gunship chopper as it swept in to pick up the downed crewmen and a reporter who was with them. They grabbed the skids, grappled at the smooth body, trying to get out.

The prayers went unanswered. Two other helicopters, hit by groundfire, quickly dropped off their load of infantrymen and took off without stopping.

Five other pilots decided they would not risk the groundfire.

Bus Operation

Golden Gate Bridge District buses will begin operating on daylight saving time at 3:01 a.m. tomorrow. Buses departing before that hour will complete their runs on standard time.

Reassigning Of Beban Is Sought

I-J Special Report

SAN FRANCISCO — The state Court of Appeal was asked yesterday by the American Civil Liberties Union to order Richard W. Beban of Mill Valley reassigned to his previous duties on the Marin County Grand Jury.

The 23-year-old maverick member of the jury contends he was taken off certain jury committees after he held an interview with the Berkeley Tribe in which he criticized some of the jury's methods.

The ACLU asked for the order after a similar action was rejected in Marin County Superior Court. Beban's term on the jury expires in June.

The ACLU action came after Beban's recent election as a director of the ACLU of Northern California.

In a separate matter, Beban is facing a contempt of court hearing for refusing to turn over documents about the Sausalito police probe.

Withdrawal From ABAG To Be Discussed

Sonoma County's withdrawal from the Association of Bay Area Governments in favor of a new North Coast coalition will be discussed at the Petaluma city council meeting Monday at 7:30 p.m.

Humboldt County also was considering joining the group, but instead asked that it become a multipurpose agency to include air and water pollution, industrial development and promotion.

The council will also hear requests for future use of the Christian Church building recently bought by the city.

Courthouse Sale Is On Agenda

The San Rafael City Council will consider the $650,000 purchase of the old county courthouse site when it meets at 8 p.m. Monday t city hall.

County supervisors last Tuesday agreed to sell the site to the city, giving the city six months to come up with the $650,000 or forfeit $10,000 to the county. The agreement requires that 40 per cent of the downtown site be open space, with half that amount fronting on Fourth Street.

McKeon Construction Co. of Sacramento proposes a six to eight-story office building, a three-story building and covered parking on the site. The firm has agreed with sale conditions, which it will assume if it acquires the property from the city.

The council also is expected to give final adoption to an ordinance declaring the council the city's redevelopment agency. Council members on April 17 unanimously approved the ordinance, which will allow financing of downtown redevelopment.

Festival Picks Marin Ballet For May Gala

The Marin Civic Ballet Company has been chosen to appear at the gala performance of the three-day Pacific Regional Ballet Festival which opens May 5 in Seattle, Wash.

The gala climaxes the festival which will include workshops, demonstrations and performances by 18 ballet companies.

The Marin company will perform "Rachmaninoff Pas de Deux," choreographed by Norbert Vesak and danced by Jane Thelen and David White.

The company will also perform, "The Gift to be Simple," a series of sketches set to hymns of the American Shaker community, at the festival's chamber concert.

Funds for the trip were raised from proceeds of this year's spring concert and Nutcracker performances.

Architects For Park Narrowed

The Tiburon Parks and Recreation Commission last night reviewed the qualifications of 10 landscape architects and park planners, and narrowed to three the number who may be asked to design a master plan for the Richardson Bay lineal park.

Representatives of the three firms will be interviewed by a commission committee, said Asst. City Mgr. Robert L. Kleinert.

The three firms under consideration are Lawrence Halprin Associates of San Francisco, Sasaki-Walker Associates of Sausalito and Royston, Hanamoto, Beck and Abey of San Francisco.

He said the commission also endorsed the concept of a regional park district as presented by county park officials at an earlier meeting, and asked that the city council support its endorsement.

Commissioners also approved a summer work program for Tiburon youths from ages 14 to 18. Kleinert said the program would run in two-week shifts from June 19 to Aug. 25, and would provide employment with city crews for two boys at a time between the dates outlined. Applicants should apply at city hall, he said.

Commissioners also approved landscaping plans for the Hillhaven water tank, Kleinert said. The plans were submitted by the Marin Municipal Water District, and the city is to maintain the trees and plants once installed by the water district, said Kleinert.

HOW TO PLAY

WINNING BRIDGE

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

Right Way To Play Suit Not Always Right Way For Hand

Everybody knows how to play the heart suit in today's hand. You lead the jack of hearts from dummy and let it ride for a finesse. If East has the king of hearts you will not lose a heart trick; and if West has the king the finesse costs nothing because you were going to lose a heart trick anyway. Right? Wrong. The right way to play a suit is not necessarily the right way to play the entire hand.

Opening lead — ♣ J

QUEEN DROPS

West opens the jack of clubs, and you win with dummy's king. East drops the queen. This should freeze the marrow in your bones.

There is grave danger that East is now out of clubs. This has a serious effect on your plan for the rest of the hand.

If you now take a heart finesse you are placing your contract in jeopardy, for if West has the king of hearts he will return a club for East to trump. (After all, West, too, saw East's queen of clubs fall on the opening lead.)

CONCEDE TO KING

So at the second trick you should lead a heart to the ace and then play another heart, conceding a trick to the king.

This play is sure to work. If each opponent has two trumps, the trumps will all be drawn on these two tricks. If one opponent has more than two trumps, he cannot give his partner a ruff (since his partner has no trumps left), and you can regain the lead to draw the rest of the trumps.

NORMAL WAY

If South makes the mistake of taking the trump finesse at the second trick —the normal way of playing the trump suit — he goes down. West wins with the king of hearts and leads the jack of clubs, allowing his partner to ruff out dummy's ace. The defenders get a spade, a club, the king of hearts and a ruffing trick.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one notrump (16 to 18 points).

You hold:
♠- 7 5 3
♥- J 9 6 4
♦- 10 9 5
♣- A K 4.

What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two clubs, the Stayman Convention asking partner to bid a major suit of four or more cards.

If he bids two hearts, you will raise to three; if he bids anything else, you will bid two notrumps.

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI)— Singer Tom Jones, whose tight-fitting trousers have become a trademark, split a seam Thursday night.

Jones was 15 minutes into his opening night act at Caesar's Palace when it happened. A thread gave way and within minutes the inside seam on the left leg of his trousers had split six inches.

"Excuse me," said Jones coolly, "while I change my pants."

FINLEY BLUE

Talks Stop: Strikeout

CHICAGO (UPI)—It was a strikeout any way you look at it. After 22 hours of negotiating, baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn flew back to New York, pitcher Vida Blue left for California and Oakland Athletics owner Charles Finley returned to his Chicago office.

Talks with the holdout pitcher ended without settlement Friday when Blue balked at making public two contract concessions, Finley said.

"I am very disappointed and disillusioned to say the least," Finley said. "We had reached an agreement granting Vida's two requests and he backed out."

He said he had "no idea" why Blue would not sign the joint statement. "If I did know why he refused, I'd be in business. Everyone agreed beforehand. I just don't know why he wouldn't sign."

Kuhn, who tried to mediate the dispute, stepped into the picture at his own invitation "because," a tired Finley said, "he thought he could be of assistance. And I'll say he really tried to help in the settlement."

Finley said the A's had agreed to give their star hurler a $5,000 bonus for the 1971 season and to give him his $8,000 college scholarship on the spot.

"When Vida signed his first contact with the A's it included a college scholarship program with $8,000 based on eight semesters with $1,000 per semester. This program was to begin within a year and a half after signing. Otherwise it was null and void. They wanted us to prepay them $8,000 today. We agreed," Finley said.

The trouble came, the owner said, when attorneys met to draft a joint statement for the press. "That statement included the two concessions and his agreed salary of $50,000," Finley said.

"But when the statement was drafted, Mr. Gerst, (Robert Gerst, Blue's agent) advised us that Vida was not agreeable to the statement. He said he preferred no statement at all."

"So there is no agreement," Finley said.

Blue, whose sensational season attracted some of the biggest crowds in the majors last year, originally asked for $110,000 for 1972. He came down to $92,000 and then to $75,000.

Finley had been adamant on the $50,000 figure.

Kuhn before department said "some progress has been made but a final solution at this time has not been worked out."

When asked if he thought a settlement was near, Finley said, "I wish I knew."

A's Top Brewers; Mangual Returns

MILWAUKEE (UPI) —In a space of a few hours, the Oakland Athletics lost a pitcher, gained an outfielder and won a ballgame.

Friday night, lefty Ken Holtzman spaced five hits and went the route to beat the Milwaukee Brewers 5-1 behind a four-run sixth inning.

The A's used four walks and three singles during their big outburst in which they sent 10 men to the plate.

Gene Tenace led off with a single and Brewer starter Jim Slaton walked Bobby Brooks and ran the count to 3-1 on Larry Brown before being relieved by Jim Colbert. Colbert walked Brown to load the bases and also walked Holtzman for force Tenace home from third.

A sacrifice fly by Bert Campaneris and singles by Joe Rudi and Reggie Jackson brought home three more runs.

Campaneris scoredRfthe game's first run after singling as a leadoff batter. Jackson drove him home with a single.

Holtzman faced only 16 batters in the first five innings while improving his record to 21. He got the first two men to start the sixth but then walked a batter and gave up successive singles to Bob Heise and John Briggs to bring home one run.

A walk to George Scott loaded the bases but Holtzman then picked off Briggs to end the threat.

Knicks Visit Lakers; Los Angeles Favored

INGLEWOOD (UPI) — Despite a 22-point setback in the opening playoff game, the Los Angeles Lakers still are the favorites in their National Basketball Association championship series with the New York Knicks and six-point choices in Sunday's second game.

But the series odds have dropped from 5-2 to 6-5 following Wednesday night's 114-92 Knicks' romp, a win in which the New Yorkers blazed away at a 72 per cent clip from the field in the first half for an 18-point intermission bulge.

'GET SHOOTER'

"We're going to have to get to the shooter quicker," Lakers' coach Bill Sharman said. "We're going to need a smarter defensive effort.

"The problem is Jerry Lucas. Because of him, the Knicks are the hardest team in the league for us to match up against.

A fill-in for the ailing Willis Reed, the 6-foot-8 Lucas fires in 25-foot range bombs with amazing accuracy. He was shooting 50 per cent from the floor going into the Lakers-Knicks' series and had 26 points on 13 of 21 in the opener.

'LUCAS TOUGHER'

"I don't want to take anything away from Willis," Sharman continued, "but when Lucas is hitting, he's tougher for us than Reed."

"People dwell on Reed's absence and forget about Lucas."

Los Angeles ' 7-1 goliath, Wilt Chamberlain, does not have the physical equipment to go outside and chase Lucas. If Sharman puts one of his other front liners on Lucas, Chamberlain would have to guard either 6-5 Bill Bradley or 6-6 Dave DeBusschere, both talented shooters.

Bradley had 29 points on 11 for 12 from the floor and DeBusschere finished with 19 on 9 for 18 in addition to picking off 18 rebounds, one rebound less than Chamberlain.

'PHILOSOPHIC'

Red Holtzman, whose Knicks beat the Lakers in seven games for their first NBA championship in 1970, was philosophic about his club's eighth win in nine playoff games.

"We had a good night and they had a bad one," he said. "We've been playing well lately, which you have to do to beat a team like that."

With Gail Goodrich and Jerry West averaging 51.7 points between them, the Lakers set an all-time NBA record of 69-13 during the regular season. Meanwhile, the Knicks struggled to a 48-34 mark to finish second in the Atlantic Division —the seventh best record in the league.

ANOTHER MARK

The Lakers scored more than 100 points in 81 of their 82 regular season contests, another league mark. But in 11 playoff games, they've been under the century mark four times.

In a 4-0 sweep against Chicago and a 4-2 victory over defending NBA champion Milwaukee, West averaged 24.5 points and Goodrich 22.9 but both had subpar nights in the first game against the Knicks. West finished with just 12 points and Goodrich 20, only four in the final three quarters.

KNICKS

The Knicks took Baltimore in six games in their first playoff series and then upset Atlantic Division kingpin Boston in five for the Eastern Conference title.

The second game of the series will start at 1:40 p.m. PST Sunday and is scheduled to be shown locally on television as well as nationally.

Redwood Loses In Baseball

No Marin County Athletic League baseball team has ever made it through the year undefeated.

Redwood High School's 1972 squad will not do it either.

The three-hit pitching of Marin Catholic's Jim Petray and Jim Lowe at Albert Park yesterday stopped the Giants for the first time all year, 3-1.

WILDCATS

The Wildcats, as usual, scrambled for their runs. In the fourth inning, with two men on, Rich Lopez popped a ball up near the first base line. It bounced off catcher Doug Hartman's glove, and in a disputed call, the umpire ruled it a fair ball. A hustling Steve Sherry was meanwhile legging it home from second to score.

ARBIOS

Pete Arbios connected solidly to left center in the fifth off loser Gene Frey to get Marin Catholic's next run, plating Scott Cozza from third.

The Marin 'Cats combined two infield singles, a sacrifice, and a wild pitch for their final tally in the sixth.

Scott Barrie had all three of Redwood's hits, one coming in a dynamite fifth inning for Redwood. Petray was in a jam, having walked two Giants and given up Barrie's single. With the bases loaded, he unleashed a wild pitch, scoring Redwood's only run from third.

Still with the sacks full, Marin Catholic turned to Lowe, who with one pitch, got Bob Brown to ground into a double play, third to home to first.

OUTSTANDING CATCHES

The Wildcats are now 4-4 in league play, but according to Hughes, "We don't feel that today's win was an upset. We think we're best in the league."

JOHNSON BOMBED

Giant Bullpen Collapses In Loss

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — It's an old story and a sad one for the San Francisco Giants. The bullpen collapsed again.

"We have to find someone who can come into a game get somebody out," said manager Charlie Fox after the Giants lost 8-6 to the Montreal Expos Friday night.

Jerry Johnson, who won 12 games and saved 18 others last season in the Giants' drive to the National League West pennant, gave up three hits and the winning runs in the ninth inning.

"He's throwing the ball the same as he did last year," said Fox, "but the other teams are hitting it. There's nothing wrong with his arm."

Johnson took over in the ninth inning after Ron Bryant left for a pinchhitter. Johnson got one out and then gave up singles to Bob Bailey and Mike Jorgenson. He struck out Clyde Mashore but then walked Ken Singleton to load the bases.

Pinchhitter Jim Fairey then singled to center to score two runs and send the Giants reeling to their sixth defeat in the last seven games.

The Giants have only two complete games from their pitching staff this season and, ironically, both of those were losing efforts by Juan Marichal.

"We need a complete game from somebody right now," Fox said.

San Francisco saw a 13-hit attack wasted by the poor pitching of starter Don Carrithers and Johnson's failure in the ninth inning.

"We're getting enough runs to win," said Fox.

Chris Speier had three doubles, scored two runs and drove in another; Dave Kingman had a homer and drove in three runs and Bobby Bonds a triple and two singles.

Kingman now has major league leading totals of six

Kentucky Court Gets 1968 Derby Win Row

BOSTON (UPI)—It apparently will take the Kentucky Supreme Court to decide who won the 1968 Kentucky Derby, the declared winner Forward Pass, or Dancer's Image.

That is, if the Supreme Court agrees to accept jurisdiction.

The owner of Dancer's Image, Peter Fuller, said here Friday he would ask the Kentucky high court to rehear the Kentucky Court of Appeals decision that overturned a lower court ruling which had given first place money of $122,600 to Fuller's horse.

"I'm stunned by the latest decision," Fuller said. "I thought the matter had already been settled. We will seek a rehearing. I think that is the next move."

Fuller did say that it was his "understanding that you can't take this case to the Supreme Court —I don't know why." He said he had "no idea" whether the court would agree to rehear the case, but he intended to try to find out.

Fuller said he had spent "$200,000 out of his pocket, not counting any time and energy on my part. That seems incredible," he said at a news conference.

Dancer's Image did finish first in the 94th Kentucky Derby but the horse was disqualified and the race awarded to Forward Pass after the drug phenulbutazone, or a derivative, was found after the race in one of the urine samples taken from Dancer's Image.

Appealing the disqualification, Fuller won a Franklin County circuit court decision that gave Dancer's Image the victory. However, the Court of Appeals this week found there was "an abundance of substantial evidence" supporting the drug charge. Forward Pass thus became the "winner" again of a four-year-old horse race.

Fuller noted that Dancer's Image is in stud and he has lost a great deal in stud fees.

Reliever Lee Finds It Rough

By U. P. INTERNATIONAL

Terra Linda's Bill Lee is apparently finding his major league baseball life difficult as the Boston Red Sox' number one left-handed reliever.

Lee suffered his first loss yesterday as the Rangers dumped Boston 9-6, to the delight of the Texas fans. Lee, 0-1, surrendered four runs in one and two-thirds innings of labor after taking over for starter Sonny Siebert in the sixth inning. Lee was credited with three strikeouts but gave up three hits and two walks.

The Baltimore Orioles, aided by Nolan Ryan's wildness and paced bly a 16-hit attack snapped a four-game losing streak Friday night by whipping the California Angels, 12-2.

Bobby Darwin, the AmericanLeague's early-season slugging sensation belted his fifth home run to highlight a four-run seventh inning and give the American West leading Minnesota Twins a 4-1 victory over Mel Stottlemyre and the New York Yankees.

Bullpen refugee Tom Timmerman pitched a three-hitter for his first big league shutout while Norm Cash and Ed Brinkman drove in four runs each to bring the Detroit Tigers a 12-0 win over the Chicago White Sox.

NELSON GOLF

Rodriguez, Trevino, Murphy Share Lead

DALLAS (UPI)—Juan "Chi Chi" Rodriguez has a share of the Byron Nelson Golf Classic lead with Lee Trevino and Bob Murphy going into today's second round, but it isn't the same little Puerto Rican links clown the fans are used to seeing. The 1972 edition of Chi Chi's Follies is being played straight from the shoulder with no more clowning around —and its paying dividends.

Friday, for example, he offset a lone bogey with five birdies for a four-under-par 32-34—66 to grab the early lead and it stood up although first the portly Murphy and then the semiserious Trevino came in to match the figure.

This trio was among 26 players who managed to best Preston Trail Golf Club's 7,086-yard, par 35-35—70 layout —the biggest assault the tortuous course has ever absorbed. Eighteen others matched regulation figures.

Rodriguez, Murphy and Trevino held only a one-stroke lead over five players bunched at 67, including rookie Jim Barber, former champion Bruce Crampton, Larry Ziegler, Bruce Devlin and Wilf Homenuik.

Homenuik, the Canadian lightweight, had a big chance to grab the lead with a 65, but a bogey-bogey finish wrecked it.

Billy Casper, Tom Weiskopf, former champ Miller Barber, John Schlee, Charles Coody and Gay Brewer —the latter returning to the tour for the first time since a bleeding ulcer knocked him out of the Masters —were at 68. And, defending champion Jack Nicklaus, seeking his third straight Nelson crown, was among a dozen players at 69. Napa's Ron Cerrudo had a 71.

Rodriguez, who claimed the galleries had deserted him as his game fell apart, said there would be "no more joking ... I never concentrated on my game before ... I was just a natural funny man.

Rodriguez had birdie putts of 10, 8, 1, 20 and 6 feet, but took his only bogey when he two-putted from 15 feet on No. 10.

JACK HANLEY

Jerry Johnson Blessed By Luck

One of Jerry Johnson's friends told him last year that if he fell out of a sixth floor window his fall probably would be cushioned by $20 bills. "That's how good your luck is," said the friend and Johnson chuckled.

The No. 1 bullpen man of the Giants was a lucky fellow in several relief assignments last season, particularly on one balmy June night in Candlestick Park. Bob Barton belted one of Johnson's fast balls for a ninth inning grand slam homer that established a 9-5 lead for the Padres over the Giants.

BUT JOHNSON was rewarded with an unexpected win when his teammates rallied for five runs in the bottom of the ninth to win the ball game 10-9.

Of course, Johnson didn't win 12 games in relief last year and save 18 other games purely on luck. He is an over-powering pitcher when his fast ball is running away from batters, sailing upward or occasionally leaving black and blue marks on his catcher. Johnson doesn't rely on skill — just that fast ball which neither he nor his catcher at times have any idea where it is going.

ON THOSE occasions when the fast ball, or Johnson's seldom used slider, comes in to a batter straight as a string it is hammered hard. Major league batters love to belt fast balls, just as much as broad-shouldered pitchers like Johnson love to throw them by batters.

During spring training this year, Johnson appeared in six exhibition games for a total of nine innings during which he allowed 15 hits, eight runs and wound up with a Cactus League ERA of 8.00. He lost two of those games prompting somebody to comment: "Maybe he won't be lucky this year."

However, in his first three appearances this year, Johnson notched three consecutive saves but not with ease. He yielded five hits in a total of 4⅔ innings during his first three appearances. His first save wasn't a rough assignment because Juan Marichal, a trifle tired after blanking the Astros for eight innings in the season opener, left him with a 5-0 lead in the ninth.

IN HIS FOURTH appearance April 23 in Candlestick, Johnson came on in the ninth inning with a 7-3 lead against the same Astros. He couldn't get anybody out. He faced four men. He walked two and two others doubled. That set in motion a 10-run Astro rally for a 13-7 decision.

Now, it looked like Johnson's luck really had run out. But on April 26 in Candlestick, Johnson made his fifth appearance, this time in the 10th inning against the Phillies with the score tied, 4-4. Again he was tagged for two doubles around a walk and the Phillies were ahead 6-4 — but only temporarily.

JOHNSON'S LUCK definitely had not run its course. His teammates rallied for four runs in the bottom of the 10th, Bobby Bonds delivering the decisive blow, a two-run homer.

A relief pitcher with one win and three saves despite a 9.00 ERA in five appearances during which he yielded nine hits, six runs, four walks in 5⅔ innings, such as Johnson has, has to be a lucky fellow.

BOWLING

San Rafael Man's 661 Top Mark

A 22-year-old San Rafael bowler who "had a cup of coffee in the big leagues" topped Marin County keglers this week.

Terry DeYoung, who toured the professional bowling circuit for two weeks last year, recorded a 661 series at Nave Lanes, surpassing all county competitors by at least seven pins. DeYoung, who has been bowling in Marin County for six years, started slowly but finished strong with games of 186, 218, and 257 at the Ignacio lanes.

Petaluma's Augie Rivas was next with a 654 at San Rafael's Country Club Bowl. The Professional Central California Bowlers Association representative rolled a 214, 213 and 227.

Hats off to two Marin County veteran bowlers, recently enshrined in Marin's Bowling Hall of Fame. Zeno Gelatti of San Anselmo and Dick Treadway, a former Corte Madera resident now living in Reno, were selected.

Zeno, a founder of the Marin County Bowler's Association, averaged in the 190's, while Treadway, a former MCBA president, averaged slightly more than 200 per game.

Boston, New York NHL Tilt

BOSTON (UPI)—A press clipping on the bulletin board in the Boston Bruins' dressing room quotes Vic Hadfield of the New York Rangers as saying his team was "unbeatable."

The Bruins aren't saying Hadfield is wrong. They aren't saying it but they leave you with no doubts that they're thinking it.

The Bruins and Rangers meet here Sunday in the opener of their best-of-seven series for the National Hockey League's Stanley Cup championship —a title the Bruins won only two years ago and the Rangers have failed to secure since the 1939-40 season.

"I see where Hadfield already has it won," Boston defenseman Bobby Orr said after Friday's workout. "I think it'll be a good series."

Many of the Bruins, like center Derek Sanderson, expect the series will go the full seven games.

"We're ready for them," goalie Gerry Cheevers said. "We feel sharp. We know this is going to be a tough, tough series. We know it' a different series. We had a pretty easy time of it against St. Louis, but it's not going to be that way against New York."

Boston Coach Tom Johnson said he doesn't plan to spend too much time worrying about matching forward lines with the Rangers.

"What's the sense in that," Johnson said. "At this point you don't know how your lines will be playing."

homers and 18 runs batted in.

The Giants put on their best offensive display of the season in the third inning when they scored four runs to tie the score 5-5. Speier led off with a double, Bonds tripled and Kingman and Ken Henderson followed with consecutive homers.

San Francisco went ahead on Speier's third double of the night in the sixth inning and lost an additional run when the ball bounced over the fence for a ground-rule two base hit. Chris Arnold would have scored easily from first base had the ball stayed in the park.

Montreal and San Francisco met again today with Steve Stone (0-0) pitching against Montreal's Mike Torrez (0-0).

LOSSES AVENGED

Petaluma, Tomales In Baseball Wins

In other Southern Sonoma County diamond play, Jim Leoni hurled St. Vincent to a 3-1 victory over visiting North Central League II champion Calistoga and Tomales belted Upper Lake, 9-2, to keep its NCL II title hopes alive.

Tomales reversed an early season pasting by the Cougars, thanks to the home run of Lee Soldati and Bill Zimmerman, and 12-strikeout, four-hit pitching by Russ Sartori. Soldati's was the big blow — a grand slam homer to left in the sixth. Zimmerman, who went three for four to lead the Braves, slugged his round-tripper to lead off the first inning.

Petaluma High School scored 30 points to finish fourth behind Santa Rosa's 86½, Montgomery of Santa Rosa's 82 and Napa's 61½ points in the North Bay League Swim Finals held yesterday in Santa Rosa.

The Trojans took a second and two thirds. Mike Caldwell, Petaluma's most consistent performer this year, copped a second in the 100-yard backstroke with a 1:04.9 and a third in the 50 freestyle with a 24.6. Mark Blomquist swam a 1:15.6 in the 100 backstroke to take third, and Caldwell, Fred Gibson, Blomquist and Mark Sipes churned out a 1:58.0 to gain a third place in the 400 free relay.

Terra Linda Victorious In Baseball

Terra Linda High School, reviving the Los Angeles Dodger winning formula of the mid-sixties, scraped out a 2-1 Marin County Athletic League baseball victory over San Rafael last night at Albert Park.

The Dodger formula involved tight pitching and opportunism on the basepaths. Last night the pitching was provided by Mike Sabel, who hurled a three-hitter, struck out six and did not allow a runner past second base after the first inning.

Mike Allen drove in the winning run with a fifth-inning single, breaking a 1-1 tie. Steve Withers set it up by going all the way to second base while Nick Mattos was trapped in a rundown.

The Trojans' first run came as Brian Wall walked in the fourth inning, stole second and third and scored on a wild pitch. San Rafael tallied in the opening frame on Bruce Howard's triple and losing pitcher Mike Farris' single.

Farris pitched well, allowing four hits and no earned runs. Terra Linda has managed only 14 hits in its last four games, but has won three of them.

Tierney Revenge In Tennis

Dan Tierney of Redwood High School avenged an earlier defeat at the hands of San Rafael's Dave Bacon yesterday on the San Rafael courts, winning by a 6-0, 6-0 washout the right to represent the Marin County Athletic League in the North Coast Section tennis tourney.

Tierney, defeated two weeks ago by a 6-4, 6-2 tally, will carry the MCAL's singles banner to Castro Valley for the NCS next weekend.

The doubles team representing Marin was to be determined this afternoon at the College of Marin in Kentfield, with pairs from many MCAL schools participating in a bracket tourney for the honor.

Redwood Golfers Fall

Steve Harris was co-medalist with a 42 but Redwood High School was defeated yesterday by El Camino of South San Francisco in a non-league golf match at the California Club in South San Francisco, 213-220.

Kings To Name Coach 'Soon'

By U.P.INTERNATIONAL

INGLEWOOD — The Los Angeles Kings expect to name a replacement soon for Fred Glover, their fifth coach in as many years.

General manager Larry Regan said Glover did a "creditable job" during the past ice hockey season but it was decided not to pick up his contract option.

Glover, 43, was signed last Oct. 30 three games into the season. He had been fired by the California Golden Seals after three years.

Under Glover, the Kings had an 18-42-8 record, finishing last in the Western Division of the National Hockey League.

Regan said several men were under consideration for the job and predicted a selection would be made shortly.

N.L. ROUNDUP

Torre Hot; Houston Walloped

By U.P.INTERNATIONAL

Joe Torre got hot and the Houston Astros got stopped cold.

Torre, last year's major league batting champion with a .363 batting average, raised his early-season mark to .382 with a four-for-five performance that ended the Astros' nine game win streak, 7-2.

Torre sliced a two-run triple to highlight a five-run Cardinal outburst in the sixth inning and slammed a run-scoring double as St. Louis scored twice in the ninth.

The big third baseman drove in three runs and scored a pair, including the go-ahead run on a sacrifice fly by Joe Hague.

In other National League games, New York downed Los Angeles 6-1, Atlanta walloped Pittsburgh 13-5, Chicago outslugged Cincinnati 10-8, Montreal edged San Francisco 8-6, and Philadelphia beat San Diego 3-0.

Hank Aaron sparked an eight-run sixth inning explosion for the Braves by singling twice, scoring twice and driving in a pair of runs. Pat Jarvis went five innings to receive credit for his second win against one loss. Bob Moose was the loser.

Major Crossroads For Transportation

Two major Marin transportation arteries cross near Corte Madera Creek in Larkspur, and a third will be added soon when the Golden Gate Transit Authority's ferry terminal is built on the canal at the creek's mouth. Sir Frances Drake Boulevard meanders next to the Bay from lower left to center right, crossing Highway 101 just north of Corte Madera Creek. Paralleling the highway are the now-abandoned tracks of the Northwestern Pacific Railroad. North (lower right) of the proposed ferry terminal lies the Hutchinson Co. rock quarry, one of two sites proposed, for a major shopping center in Larkspur. Route 17 runs along the lower edge of the photo. On the far side of the creek from the ferry terminal the Greenbrae Boardwalk stretches into marshland broken by Salt Marsh Creek to the south (left). Most of this marsh land is owned by William Herdt, but Frank Burke has tried six times in the past six years to have development plans approved for the area, failing most recently last week at the Corte Madera Town Council. South, (left) down Highway 101 the Corte Madera Center and Tamalpais Drive cloverleaf bring large-scale commercial development near the edge of Mill Valley. Traveling inland up Corte Madera Creek, the large square building with a courtyard is part of the Tamalpais High School campus.

WEEK'S BUSINESS

A Sharp Drop On The Market

NEW YORK (UPI)—Stock prices retreated sharply for a variety of reasons on the New York Stock Exchange this week, although there was late bargain-hunting.

Most indices showed a weakening in the overall market position.

The Dow Jones industrial average of 30 selected stocks fell 9.63 to 954.17. Aside from a small gain Wednesday and a blue chip-paced advance of 8.20 Friday, the Dow suffered losses as investors exhibited caution.

Standard & Poor's 500 stock index dropped 1.22 to 107.67 and the New York Stock Exchange common stock index closed 0.72 lower at 60.00.

With the initial impact of favorable first quarter earnings having worn off, analysts said overall news led to the decline. Stocks are overbought and overpriced and ready for a correction, many said.

Perhaps the chief contributing factor in the selling spree was the record redemption of mutual funds for March, analysts said. Observers said funds were selling their holdings to meet the liquidations.

Vietnam news wasn't thought to have had too much bearing on the decline, but analysts said investors were remaining cautious in view of the North Vietnamese advance on South Vietnam. President Nixon's Wednesday message announcing the withdrawal of 20,000 more troops had little effect on trading.

On the week, the volume slowed to 79,310,000 shares compared with 90,372,620 last week and 102,781,163 shares for the comparable week a year ago.

Of 1,923 issues crossing the tape 1,229 declined, 509 advanced.

Gulf Oil led the week's most active stocks, closing up 1-8 at 25 3-8 on 1,427,100 shares. Trading was paced by a block of 734,100 shares at 25, off 1-4, on Thursday.

Alaska Interstate was second, losing 3 1-8 to 46 on 996,100 shares. The issue turned weaker after the company terminated merger talks with Virginia International.

Republic Corp. was third, off 1 1-8 to 8 1-4 on 891,400 shares.

Polaroid was the week's biggest gainer, adding 14 1-4 to 139 3-8. The firm unveiled a new small color camera that spews out color pictures in seconds. Eastman Kodak, Polaroid's leading competitor, announced it would make film for Polaroid cameras. Kodak added 3 5-8.

Rheingold fell 6 1-8 after reporting a first quarter loss compared to a profit for the comparable period a year ago.

Oil issues generally were lower. Superior Oil was the biggest loser, off 13.

'Save Bay' Orders May Defeat Purpose

TOMORROW WILL SEE the opening of yachting season.

Boat building industry statistics indicate that California is becoming a state of boat owners. Tomorrow the sight of innumerable small craft on the bay will convey the same information much more forcefully than old statistics.

Boating grows in popularity for a variety of reasons. Chief among them are the prosperity of our times and urban and suburban congestion which lead many to seek solitude on the water.

When safely and intelligently engaged in, boating is a healthy outdoor recreational activity.

In short, the growth in yachting is highly desirable and should be encouraged.

THE BAY CONSERVATION and Devleopment Commission has properly adopted regulations aimed at conserving and protecting our bay. Much tideland has been filled and built upon as population densities have risen around the perimeter of the bay. Had not BCDC been formed, the rate of disappearance of tidelands was sure to have accelerated. The bay would have shrunk before our eyes.

BCDC regulations properly restrict and control the dumping of dredged material on adjoining tideland area. In one sense, this is proper. It puts the brakes on developers who would dredge a few channels and use the material thus brought up from the bottom to fill adjoining shallows so as to produce more usable, saleable land.

In another sense, however, dredging restrictions pose a threat. Many of our waterways —like San Rafael Canal, Petaluma River, Richardson Bay — require periodic dredging if they are not to fill themselves with silt carried in by tributary streams in the rainy season.

Even in a body as broad as San Pablo Bay, constant dredging is necessary to keep the ship channel open as Sacramento and San Joaquin River silt along with bottom mud and sand swept by tidal currents continually raise the bottom.

Supporters of overly strict BCDC regulations are fond of displaying maps showing the shrunken perimeter of the bay today compared with 100 years ago. They erroneously attribute all the shrink to the works of man.

IF WE TRULY WISH to save the bay, then, we must act also against certain natural forces, including silting and shoaling.

We must permit the dredging necessary to save and protect our existing waterways.

Until recently, dredgers were encouraged to carry spoil material to some remote, deep area of the bay or Golden Gate ocean approach and dump it beneath the waves.

Comes now the Regional Water Quality Control Board with strict new prohibitions on such dumping of dredged material, especially that tained by heavy metals or strong chemicals, as some bay bottom mud is.

Such regulations may be proper in some circumstances.

However, Army Corps of Engineers officers — charged with the responsibility for maintaining navigability of our waterways — have testified, along with recreational boating representatives, that the new regulations will make dredging costs prohibitive. Dredged spoil must be hauled a great distance out to sea or a great distance overland to suitable dump areas.

The practical result of BCDC restrictions plus Water Quality Control restrictions has been to make it well nigh impossible to continue necessary maintenance dredging. San Rafael Canal is already feeling the pinch, as is downtown Petaluma's turning basin, which is so shoaled as to discourage visits by yachtsmen.

If we are to avoid what the old saying described as "throwing out the baby with the bath water," dredging restrictions by both BCDC and the Water Quality Control Board must be made viable.

As presently constituted those restrictions pose a threat to the continued existence of our bay as we know it.

Civic Responsibility

Although we believe most Marinites are enlightened and as aware of their responsibilities for saving the environment as the next fellow, the response to the recycling collection centers for cans and bottles has not been overwhelming. Nor is this malaise confined to Marin.

Perhaps a different approach is required. Consider the fact that in 350 collection depots cans are being collected at the rate of 600 million a year, but in just six cities where magnetic separators are used in the municipal garbage dumps, steel cans are being collected at the rate of more than a billion a year.

This of course, does nothing about aluminum cans or glass or plastics. But if we can use our technology to get rid of the mess we are making, better do it on a grand scale than on a piecemeal, cottage industry level. Attractive as many features of life were in the simplistic "old days," it will require 20th Century means to rid us of our modern mess.

BOUQUETS to schools for their open house displays during Public Schools Week, many of which were very imaginative and cleverly done.

BOUQUET to Explorer Post 15 of San Anselmo for the Marin sports show which winds up tomorrow at the Civic Center. The post ran into considerable difficulties in arranging to put on the show, but triumphed over all.

BOUQUETS to the 11 citizens who have applied to fill a vacancy on the Larkspur Planning Commission. Such interest in community service speaks well for Larkspur.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Definition Offered Of Word 'Obscenity'

If the Supreme Court or any other court cannot come up with a hard and fast definition of obscenity — I can. It's "to level off beautiful hills and chop down lovely trees to make way for a 10-story building and a country setting."

Any spoiling of natural beauty is an act of desecration like killing a nightingale (can't say mockingbird) or spitting in a cathedral. One ought not!

Dams Could Supply Water, Stop Floods

There is an abundant supply of water flowing off over 2,000 acres of watershed west of Fairfax down through the Corte Madera creek.

Most of this land is tax free as it is owned by the water district and the Boy Scouts.

There are at least two good dam sites in this area which could be used to conserve this water and eliminate the flood control problem on which the Army Engineers have spent millions of Dollars.

Instead of doing this the MMWD with a series of meetings are trying to build up sentiment to pass a multimillion dollar bond issue to bring water from the north.

Why not conserve water and tax dollars at the same time?

Writer's Passions Supplant His Sanity

Answer to America's Unloyal Mr. Moore:

I admire Robert O. Moore for taking the time to bravely write his views concerning his desire that Hanoi win the war in Vietnam. I also admire the I-J for printing this letter. Most of all, I thank God that I live in a country where such opinions are allowed to be publicly expressed without fear of governmental reprisal, imprisonment, or death.

However, in writing his letter, Mr. Moore has created a clear doubt as to his wisdom and maturity. He treats the "U.S. military" as a concept — not the flesh and blood of men. Has this reality actually escaped him or has his supposed moral righteousness subverted any real concern for human suffering? I believe his passions have supplanted his sanity.

How Do You Know Pain's Gone If Advertising Doesn't Tell?

WASHINGTON — The Federal Trade Commission has attacked the advertising claims of the nation's leading nonprescription painkillers. In a strongly worded complaint, the FTC accused the major drug companies of making misleading and false claims about the effectiveness of their products. The main thrust of the complaint is that while most of the painkillers work, the drug companies, through advertising, give the false impression that there is a "significant difference between the products."

My friend, Prof. Heinrich Applebaum, believes that the FTC has gone too far. While he is an advocate of truth in advertising, he feels the government could do more damage than good by making the drug companies go honest.

"WHAT THEY HAVE NOT taken into consideration is the psychological effect that painkilling advertising can have on a headache," Applebaum told me in his Headache Research Laboratory located at the end of the runway at National Airport.

"In my studies, I have discovered that people are dependent on outrageous claims for painkillers to rid themselves of headaches. Let me show you." Applebaum took two volunteers and made them stand next to a plane taking off.

"This is the fastest way we have of giving people headaches," he explained. After the plane took off, he said to one volunteer who was holding his head, "I am going to give you two aspirin." To the other volunteer he said, "I'm going to give two Bufferin which relieves pain 'twice as fast as aspirin.' Now tell me when your headache is gone."

The person who took the Bufferin said in three minutes, "My headache is gone." The person who took the aspirin waited six minutes and then said, "My headache is gone."

"YOU SEE," Aplebaum beamed. "The psychological factor worked!"

"But how can you be sure?" I asked.

"Because the person who thought he had taken the Bufferin really took aspirin. And the person who believed he had taken aspirin was really on Bufferin."

"You're a sneaky guy, professor," I said with great admiration.

"Now, watch this experiment." The professor took a schoolteacher and placed her on a school bus with 45 grammar school children. Her face became strained and irritable and she started to scream at the children.

"I don't know what's wrong with me," she cried.

David Janssen, the actor, got on the bus and gave her two Excedrin tablets and a glass of water. "A hospital study," Janssen told the teacher, "has revealed that it takes more than twice as many aspirin tablets to give the same pain relief as two Excedrin."

In just two minutes the teacher was smiling and climbing all over the school bus seats and shouting, "I hope this trip never comes to an end!"

"Fantastic!" I exclaimed.

"NOW, I'LL SHOW you another experiment." Applebaum had two of his lab assistants wheel a piano onto the runway. He then brought over a pianist whose fingers were wracked with arthritis. The pianist could not play a note. A man in a white coat came out and said: "Anacin starts relieving pain 22 seconds after it enters your bloodstream. That is why more doctors recommend Anacin than any other pain reliever." He gave the pianist two Anacin and a stopwatch. Exactly 22 seconds later the pianist started to hit the keys of the piano and played a Chopin sonata like it had never been played before.

Professor Applebaum said, "If he hand't known how long Anacin would take to work, that man could be sitting on his piano stool for the rest of the day wracked with pain."

"You've proved that psychology certainly plays its role, professor," I said.

"As far as I'm concerned, advertising is the most important ingredient in a painkiller. In the past, the only thing that saved the people in this country was the knowledge that no matter how bad things got, they could always go down to the drugstore and get fast, fast relief.' Now the government even wants to take the fun out of having a headache."

Does Violence On Screen Add To Violence In The Streets?

WASHINGTON — The story of the murder of the Mafia figure, Joe Gallo, was carried on the front pages of practically every newspaper in Italy. Although Italy is in the middle of an election campaign in which violence is playing a part, the gang slaughter in full view of a dozen or more witnesses in a New York restaurant was considered sufficiently important to replace politics.

This has a wry twist, since the Mafia is a transplant from its home base in Sicily, where in spite of stern measures by the government in Rome it continues with an underground autonomy. As though to rival the movie, "The Godfather," the Mafia families are on a killing kick that leaves the police mulling over clues leading nowhere.

One of the biggest commercial successes in recent years and almost universally praised by the critics, "The Godfather" spills more blood and gore than a Vietnam battle scene. Block-long lines wait for admission. One can only speculate on what audiences take away from what is almost a documentary of organized crime interspersed with the pitiful social pretensions of the wealthy Mafioso.

THE VIOLENCE in movies and on television has become so pervasive as to raise a serious question about cause and effect. Does the rising crime rate, particularly among juveniles, reflect what is seen on almost every screen? A movie such as "A Clockwork Orange," with its rapes, stompings and murders, is a celebration of violence and a grim forecast of a time when all values have been erode away.

Sophisticated viewers see in a "A Clockwork Orange" an example of Stanley Kubrick's cinematographic skill. But the mass audiences in the big theaters have no such sophistication; they see murder and rape treated with a humorous casualness drained of all human compassion. The westerns on TV and in the movies often treat killing with the same casualness as the good guys wipe out the bad guys.

This drew serious study in report by a commission appointed by Surgeon Gen. Jesse L. Steinfeld on the extent of TV violence and its effect on children. The report stirred immediate controversy with the charge that it was loaded to shield the TV networks. Expressed in the jargon of the social sciences, the conclusion was that only some children already "predisposed" to violence were likely to be influenced by the violence they witnessed. But in testifying before Sen. John Pastore's subcommittee on communications, Dr. Steinfeld said that the research showed "a significant number ... of children can be adversely affected and, therefore, it requires that we do something."

"We are talking about violence for the sake of violence," Senator Pastore said in questioning Dr. Steinfeld, "violence in order to get more advertising, violence in order to get more viewers. There is one significant statement in the report — that apparently the violence increases according to the rating, which is a very significant thing, too. So, if we are getting violence for the sake of profit, greed, that is something that should be entirely eliminated."

THE REPORT ALSO developed that violence is often used to hold audiences through the commercials. The gun is pointed just as the commercial is to go on. The viewers wait on edge through the sell to see who gets killed.

With the hearings completed, the Pastore committee laid down instructions for a violence measurement. The surgeon general, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and the Federal Communications Commission were instructed to come up with standards whereby appreciable differences in the volume of violence can be determined from year to year. This is considered especially important for children's programs, since in most of the cartoon sequences everybody gets zapped every other minute. Consideration is also to be given to the content of the commercials.

The theory is that with a violence measurement the networks can be monitored and there will be no question of censorship or infringement of the right to publish and show. A recent report told of the marked increase in crimes of violence committed by young girls. Parents' groups throughout the country are increasingly concerned over the cause-and-effect relationship between violence on the screen and violence in the streets and on the playgrounds. It is a warning that censorship will come next if voluntary restraints are not applied.

Hard To Be Sure Of Proportions In Complex, Spun-Out ITT Case

The ITT case drags on. We have long since gone through the Dita Beard chapter. Now it's the Flanigan chapter. This may be close to the end. Some hope so; others don't.

The trouble about the whole ITT case is that it's so hard to be sure of the proportions.

ON THE ONE HAND there is nothing new about a big business interest or corporation taking its case for special treatment to the White House and comingaway with what it wants. This has been going on in Washington since the days of Alexander Hamilton. It happens in every administration.

The biggest single activity in Washington is trying to influence government to one's own advantage. The city is jammed with lawyers and public relations artists whose livelihood is made from helping people who live and work elsewhere to get something from Washington.

The label usually put on such activities is "lobbying." The word is frequently used pejoratively. It need not have an unsavory implication. After all, the purpose of government is to help the individual citizen in his "pursuit of happiness." A corporation, even if very big, is still a legal person. It is not inherently immoral (although some of its actions can be). There is nothing necessarily improper about the search for favors in Washington. Yet sometimes improper things are done in that search.

THE QUESTION always was and still is to be drawn between the proper and the improper.

Take the case, for example, of the so-called "highway lobby." It consists of enterprises interested in selling automobiles, trucks, gasoline, tires, concrete and highway steel; all the people who make money out of a proliferation of highways and the use thereof. They do not make as much money out of building railway lines either on the surface or underground.

The "highway lobby" has done everything in its power for years to block the building of an underground rapid transit system for Washington. It delayed that system by a quarter of a century. It currently is waging a defensive action to try to prevent the funds built up from gasoline taxes being used for other than highway building.

This is self-interest lobbying. Those who engage in it argue that their welfare is in the general public interest. Sometimes it probably is, but not as often as the lobbyists for some special cause like to contend. We suspect that due to the "highway lobby" the building of highways in the United States has enjoyed a higher priority than serves the general interest.

WHERE THE WHOLE business gets out of line is when too much is paid for something of dubious value to the public interest.

Was it in the public interest for ITT to be let out of an antitrust suit? We don't know because the case never came to trial for a test.

Was there a conscious connection between that loophole for ITT and the funds granted, and more promised, for putting the Republican convention into San Diego? We don't know. The circumstances are highly suspicious, but the evidence is not decisive.

The trouble with the whole thing is that it looks bad. It looks like Republicans are being too considerate of corporate interests of dubious value to the public welfare.

The whole thing leaves us with a wish that somehow could and finance themselves without being quita so dependent on big money from big corporations, just as we wish Democrats could get along without quite so much big money from big labor unions.

The ITT case is not provably (yet) one of selling big favors for big money. But it leaves an unpleasant taste in the mouth and is too uncomfortably reminiscent of how things were done in the days of Warren Harding.

Polish Youth Helping To Change The National Mood Of Frustrated Country

EDITOR'S NOTE — Monitor correspondent Eric Bourne recently visited Poland for the first time in three years. Under the Gierek regime, he reports, the national mood is one of growing 'Polish-ness' and rapport between the people and their government. Here are Bourne's impressions of present-day Poland.)

By ERIC BOURNE
The Christian Science Monitor
News Service

WARSAW — One of Poland's best-known Communist "liberals" opens the door of his office to escort us to the lift.

He has just been elected to Parliament.

Four intelligent looking youngsters are waiting for him. One, a pretty blonde girl, throws an arm around his shoulders and kisses him on the cheek.

"Kongratulacije!" she exclaims warmly, and the boys beam approval and shake his hand.

He looks very pleased.

As a candidate of the National Unity Front — which makes all the nominations, leaving the voters no alternative choices — he would have been elected whatever.

But he had been listed third of the three candidates on the ballot. Yet he, the youngest, most liberal minded one, gained a bigger vote than his two colleagues. To his young friends, this is a matter for warm congratulations.

Something similar has happened in many other Polish constituencies.

WE ENTER a candle-lit restaurant popular with young people. It is very full, and we must share a table.

At one, a bearded youth and his girl are singing softly to taped music from the bar. "May we sit down?" we ask, and they assent. The boy asks, "Do you mind if we go on singing?"

We notice that the couple — like the others around — is sipping only glasses of light wine or Western soft drinks. Most East European regimes now have allocated considerable hard currency for investment in soft drink production in their efforts to check youthful use of hard liquor.

It was not like that in the last frustrated years of the unimaginative regime the Poles threw out in December, 1970.

Alcoholism is still an acute Polish problem. (Visiting schools and local halls that were used as polling stations, one saw that each and every one has pictorial displays pointing out the evils of alcohol and damage to personality.)

BUT WHEN MAKING a round of some of their favorite night spots here, one gets an impression that among youth, at least, the campaign, combined with less frustrating political conditions, has begun to bring about a change of habit.

There is a strong appeal to youth — all, remember born since the last war — in the new regime's program. Youth posters proclaim: "You are a citizen of Poland, make good use of your rights!"

A million teen-agers voted for the first time last month. Even within the limits of the Polish system they managed to boost the vote totals for a fresh, younger generation of lawmakers.

A Warsaw editor who has been lecturing student groups about ratification of the Polish-West German treaty and the outlook for East-West detente says: "Invariably some young person asks if detente will mean the building of pan-European highways" including Poland.

Already they have had their hopes boosted by the beginning of passport — and visa-free travel — with just their everyday identity card — in most of Eastern Europe, and by the "open frontier" between East Germany and Poland instituted last Jan. 1.

Nearly two million Poles and East Germans have since availed themselves of this opportunity of "instant" shopping trips and pleasure jaunts at will.

"BEFORE," SAYS a housewife, "if I needed a dozen things I would have to go to as many shops. Now I can get the lot on a single trip to just one store."

Removal of frustrations like this housewife's have done as much as anything to bring about the immense change of atmosphere visible to this writer after three years' absence from Poland.

Change, however, is not only in higher wages, or stabilized economy, and fine new self-service stores. Or the virtual abolition of the waiting list for cars, with the Polish Fiat now rolling off the assembly line — another 50,000 this year — and available for cash with immediate delivery. Or the big cuts in duty on imported cars.

It is also a change of national mood. A striking example: After a few days here, anyone familiar with postwar Poland must realize an absence of one of the familiar ingredients — Polish cynicism and, above all, the often "sick" humor of the Gomulka years.

You ask journalists and their ilk, who previously would spill them out as soon as you met, "What's happened to the political jokes?"

"THERE ARE NONE, or very few — and those there are, are very mild," an editor friend replies. "People now are in a serious mood — too serious for that old kind of crack."

He remarks also: "We have grown out of the romanticism of '56 (the Polish "October," with its dreams of a new era, which faded in a few brief years). That is a good thing. Throughout our history we Poles have so often been unreal, overly romantic.

"What we have now is a more solidly founded movement, one that sees the possibilities but recognizes also the realities."

No one, then, is wildly optimistic. Many are skeptical still. But there are also widespread signs of a new spirit in place of the blank despair and alienation that gripped Poland through the 1960s.

"REFORM" is not forseen as sweeping, radical changes. The major change is qualitative, and the regime's ajor achievement is a restoration of cmmunication between government and people.

In party leader Edward Gierek's language this means removal of the "painful disproportions" of the previous decade; a "growth of trust between rulers and ruled"; and the restoration of "workers' rights."

In concrete terms it means wage incentives, including a better bonus system already yielding results in better production, and a record housing drive, not only for 160,000 new homes this year and a million by 1975, but also for more per capita living space and more concern for good building and interior convenience as well.

Even this will leave a long queue. But that is the burden of the problem.

People are quieter, more satisfied, because now they are informed. Under the Gomulka regime, the Politburo was a cabal. Now everyone knows it meets every Tuesday. Newspapers carry prompt reports on party and Cabinet meetings.

GIEREK'S OWN style commends itself to the people. His 99.80 per cent poll in last month's elections must be seen in that light. It was noted, too, that associates who had set out to establish his kind of rapport with the workers polled better than many who were still "suspect."

On one election visit to a factory, he found the workers spruced up in new overalls. "They were issued this morning," they told him. When he saw the shining new canteen equipment, they said, "We got that this morning, too."

"All right," Gierek curtly told the management, "I'll come by another day," and left.

He offers the country as a whole the same opportunities achieved by the miners in his native Silesia, which he led to a high degree of efficiency and local prosperity before he became party leader 16 months ago.

Before the Baltic shipyard workers "exploded" in December, 1970, they had been complaining for years that despite their contribution to a shipbuilding boom that had benefited the whole economy, they were worse off than most. Now they are up with the miners.

WORKERS IN key industries are being given housing priorities, and private peasant farmers — who hold 89 per cent of the agricultural land — now qualify for free medical care like anyone else.

To dogmatists who criticize "inequalities," the answer given is that the nation can "count only on its honest work, efficiently organized and wisely managed" and that, above all, those who work best must be rewarded best.

Where is all this leading Poland?

Everyone here is mindful of the scope of reform permissible in Eastern Europe as well as the international, ideological implications of the Communist bloc alliance.

That is why Poles look with such interest now at Hungary, which has not only restructured the management of its economy, but has ended much of the old regime's oppressiveness without running into the hazards that wrecked the Czechs.

POLES HAVE grown in confidence, knowing that they brought about a change of government and that no outsiders, particularly Russians, deemed it prudent to interfere. The new regime itself draws confidence from the fact that it required no outside "help" to "restore order" after the 1970 riots.

Its concern is to encourage this new sense of pride — not "nationalism" of a narrow or aggressive kind but a deeply felt sense of "national" Polishness evident in almost all one's contacts and observation.

Within this framework, however, the trend is toward a more "Polish" and more tolerant society, with, for example, noncollectivized agriculture and concessions to the Roman Catholic Church. All of this is quite different from orthodox practice elsewhere in the bloc.

CENSORSHIP REMAINS. But most Polish writers seem content with the compromise with the regime reflected at their recent congress, which restored many liberal voices to their old places in the literary world. Their intent obviously is to support the present consensus and avoid extravagant proposals that could only embarrass Gierek.

What do the Russians think about it? Poles who would be the first to feel the pinch if there were interference assure you very firmly there is none. They also recall Gomulka's effective rebuff to Nikita S. Khrushchev in 1956 and point out that pressure now would certainly be even more counterproductive.

A CHANGING POLAND — Poland's youth is emerging as the group which is helping to bring about a growing nationalism, long absent from the country which has been plagued with many years of frustrating political conditions.

"There is no need for it anyway," they say. "The crucial thing for us is that the new link between regime and people be preserved. And this is our business — it depends on ourselves."

Within this context of "tolerances" and domestic confidence, all but the most skeptical here tell you they see ahead, however much uphill, a better Poland.

Behind The News

CONSUMER PROTECTION

Sweden Getting Tough On False Advertising

STOCKHOLM (UPI) — In Sweden if it's advertised as orange juice it must be orange juice, not a synthetic product. The KO — consumer ombudsman konsumentombudsman in Swedish — sees to that.

The consumer ombudsman or KO functions under the 1971 Unfair Competition Act and his main activity is to guard against false or misleading advertising in any medium.

In one of the first cases, the KO moved against a company which, in an ad, showed a glass full of orange juice placed between a split orange. The juice was completely synthetic in content. The ombudsman took the company to Market Court, established to back up the KO, and it ruled the ad misleading. The company withdrew it.

ACCORDING TO Sven Heurgren, who is the consumer ombudsman, this is a pertinent example of what his office is supposed to do.

"Truth in advertising is very much society's business," he said in an interview, "and we are protecting the consumer."

By calling, the 40-year-old, fair-haired Heurgren is a judge. As KO, he heads an office of 20 fulltime staff members who keep close watch on all business practices directly relating to the consumer. "Misleading information," he said, "can apply to the nature of goods and services, their characteristics, price, quality, durability, nutritive value in foods, and so on."

There has been some complaint in the business community about the KO's powers, but not significantly. Swedes are accustomed to ombudsmen. There already are the justice ombudsman, the military ombudsman, the press ombudsman, among others. Essentially their funtion is to act on complaints by the public. "We act for the little man," as Heurgren put it.

SVEN HEURGREN
Sweden's consumer watchdog

IN THE FIRST year of the KO. Heurgren's office received 2,500 complaints. Most of the complaints came from individuals but some also were listed by business firms against other business firms alleging unfair practice, and some were brought by consumer protective agencies.

All complaints are examined but not necessarily acted upon. About half of last year's complaints were deemed to require action by the KO. The others. Heurgren said, either were frivolous or without substance.

One complaint was made against a retailer who advertised anchovies as a hangover cure. The KO ruled that the claim was humorous and obviously so and the complaint was rejected. In another case, however, a sausage maker who put too few sausages into too large a package was required to change his packaging.

WORLD WAR II'S MIGHT

Rusting Ships Hold Many Memories

By JAMES O. CLIFFORD

VALLEJO (UPI) — The "fightingest ship" of World War II sits idle in a long line of mothballed vessels, her decks littered with rusty paint chips as she awaits her fate.

For the U.S.A. O'Brannon, holder of 20 battle stars, it looks like the scrap heap. The O'Bannon, dubbed the "fightingest ship" by the Navy itself, is one of 40 inactive vessels at the Mare Island Naval Shipyard north of San Francisco. Another 42 ships are located two hours drive away at the subordinate inactive fleet at Stockton.

There are other famous names among the vessels, such as the submarine Pampanito and the guided missile heavy cruiser Canberra, but few World War II ships still afloat boast histories equalling the little 376 foot destroyer O'Bannon, whose men nicknamed her "Fighting Irish."

Lt. John Bryan, 41, executive officer in charge of the vessels at the two facilities, says in May he will report to the Navy that the O'Bannon can be put up for sale as scrap.

BRYAN, WHOSE office overlooks the submarine Bashaw, on which he once served as engineering officer, said men who served on the ships often come with their families to show them the vessels.

"We have to warn them that the ships are not in the same condition they were when they were last aboard." he said.

Some of the ships are being stripped of anything useful, but others, such as the destroyer Scott, are what the layman calls "mothballed."

"Some of these ships could be ready in very little time if the Navy needed them," Bryan said. "Dry air is circulated through them all the time. This keeps the machinery and electrical gear in the same shape as when the air conditioning system was put in."

HE SAID IT usually takes about 60 days to "get a ship completely dry and seal up the leaks."

The O'Bannon has none of the eleborate sealing cocoons that mark the preserved "dry air" ships.

"I think it is a shame to see all this history just rotting away," said Pat Smith of Seattle, a petty officer third class who sometimes takes visitors through the ships. "I guess I've taken 12 men through the O'Bannon last year. Most of them are really shocked."

The O'Bannon's wheel, bell and battle ribbons that once were attached to her bridge all have been sent to Washington for storage. There's little to show she was the ship of which Adm. William F. Halsey said:

"The history of the Pacific war can never be written without telling the story of the U.S.S. O'Bannon."

A TABLE IN the room where the officer of the day stood duty still carries the shamrock symbol of the O'Bannon, and her motto, "Second to None," is emblazoned on her funnel covers. Otherwise she has been picked clean.

The O'Bannon, named after a Marine hero of the war with the Tripoli pirates, has a long list of sinkings to her credit. Her finest hour came during the battle of Guadalcanal when she took on the Japanese battleship Hiyei in the struggle to prevent fresh enemy reinforcements from landing to fight embattled U.S. Marines.

The destroyer got so close to her huge foe that the Japanese vessel was unable to depress her guns enough to hit the American. The O'Bannon fired away as 14-inch shells passed harmlessly over her crewmen's heads.

In the midst of the fight the Japanese heavyweight suddenly was enveloped in a sheet of incandescent flame. David had beated Goliath.

THIS WAS THE battle in which the cruiser San Francisco suffered such extensive damage she later was broken up for scrap.

Smith said when former O'Bannon crewmen come aboard they seldom talk about this famous battle but prefer to recall the time they sunk a Japanese submarine — with potatoes.

The official Navy version says that in April, 1943, the O'Bannon blasted the conning tower from a Japanese submarine with her five-inch gun. The sub was unable to submerge and armed Japanese sailors poured from the hull as the O'Bannon pulled alongside. This time it was the O'Bannon who couldn't depress her gun at such close range, and the American sailors were unarmed. One quick-witted blue-jacket dashed below to break open a crate of potatoes.

The Americans hurled potatoes and at least one Japanese was knocked overboard. Finally the two vessels were far enough apart for the five-incher to sink the submarine. The next day Adm. Halsey sent the O'Bannon a message congratulating the crew on "your ingenuity in making use of all available weapons."

SMITH SAID the visiting O'Bannon veterans — including a full commander — tell the story differently. He said crewmen say a sailor was peeling potatoes outside the galley when the sub popped up. He continued:

"They said he started throwing the potatoes at the Japanese sailors who apparently thought he was tossing grenades," Smith said. "They ran below so fast they forgot to close the hatches and the sub sank when she flooded while diving."

Whatever happens to the O'Bannon, Smith said, he hopes she doesn't meet the same fate as the World War II destroyer Stanly that recently was towed away for scrap by Japanese tugboats.

This Week In The World

By United Press International

A flotilla of 16 canoes bobbed in Sandy Hook Bay off Leonardo, N. J. as the Navy munitions ship Nitro approached.

The ship moved slowly past the canoes, carrying antiwar demonstrators, as it headed for the Atlantic Ocean. Then a cheer went up from the demonstrators. First one sailor, then another jumped overboard. Seven in all went over the side and tried to swim to the canoes. But Coast Guard vessels picked all of them up and returned them to the Nitro.

President Nixon told a national television audience that the bombing raids on North Vietnam will continue as long as the invasion of South Vietnam goes on.

But he announced that another 20,000 U.S. troops will be pulled out of Vietnam by July. And he expressed confidence that progress would be made in the Paris peace talks.

The talks resumed Thursday with more public accusations from both sides. And Communist negotiators said the U.S. claim that South Vietnam had been invaded was absurd.

The only hope for real progress appeared to depend on the arrival of Le Duc Tho, North Vietnam Politburo member.

He participated in secret negotiations with the United States in the past and indications were that he would be doing so again.

Around The World, Around The Clock

ABOARD USS TICONDEROGA — Three huge orange-and-white striped parachutes lowered the Apollo 16 command ship into the blue-green seas 1,500 miles south of Honolulu. The 1,391,000-mile trip to the moon ended almost exactly onarget for astronauts Thomas Mattingly, Charles Duke and John Young. Space agency geologists were highly pleased with the mission and say rock samples Duke and Young obtained may overturn carefully constructed theories on the biroon.

WASHINGTON — The Senate hearing room was overheated and crowded with reporters. Sen. Edmund S. Muskie was announcing his withdrawal from active campaigning for the Democratic presidential nomination. Delthe Mainet grin that he felt relaxed. Muskie suffered bad losses in the Wisconsin, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania primaries, but he said a lack of money was his main reason for getting out of the campaign.

PEKING — Each day thousands of Chinese visit the open paddock at the Peking Zoo where the two musk oxen named Mathilda and Milton live. One correspondent says most visitors leave making derogatory remarks about the musk oxen because they have a skin disease and are losing their hair. The animals, a gift from President Nixon, are causing Americans to lose much face, the correspondent says.

How A 102-Year Old Church Maintains Its Vitality

By JOSEPH E. SPURGEON
(Reprinted from the Presbyterian Layman)

SAN DIEGO — How can a big-city, downtown church with 3,500 members continue strong and on the move in these days of denominational decline?

The First Presbyterian Church of San Diego has every outward reason to be otherwise. It is 102-years-old.

The city around it has changed from horse-and-buggy streets to swirling freeways, crowded parking lots, and a mixture of bypassed small businesses and diehard old houses. Why wasn't First Church demolished long ago to make way for "progress"?

Unlike most old, city churches, First Presbyterian of San Diego is alive and dynamic. Exciting things are happening here. One visit with the people, and a few minutes with their pastor, the Rev. Robert Hall Mayo, shows you why.

Although the sanctuary seats 1,600 and three worship services are held each Sunday, large continuing membership is not counted a measure of success; it is a result of something good

The real power in this congregation comes from their Christ-centered attitude and approach to each other, to the local community, and to the world.

The congregation and community are ministered to by nine pastors, 45 elders and trustees, 28 deacons and 54 deaconesses. While their faith is firmly rooted in the Scriptures, it is evident that their eyes and hearts are open to the rest of the human race.

"The God of heaven, he will prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build" (Neh. 2:20). This verse could be First Presbyterian's motto; while they are building, it is evident tpat God is prospering. Westminster Manor, a long-range project to provide housing for the elderly was completed last year.

The 16-story, 156-apartment building across the street from the church is now home for 105 single women, 16 single men and 34 couples who can attend Golden Hours, Family Night events and other church services and meetings.

Rancho Del Cielo (Sky Ranch) is a 440-acre retreat center in the mountains where all in the church can "go forth under the open sky and list to nature's teachings." A permanent location for retreats and outings, it also is another church-owned building project. Many of the facilities have been built by members of the congregation.

Christian Education in 1971 was marked by consistent growth in Sunday school attendance, plus keen interest in new ideas. In a month-long "Focus on Family" program, a "Family Experiment" program and a family retreat, adults studied and struggled with issues involving the Christian home.

A June Family Daily Vacation Bible School surpassed all attendance expectations. Juniors held their own worship services regularly in a large chapel. Twelve hundred young people participated in a "Street Christian Music" meeting conducted by Larry Normen, a member of the United Presbyterian Liberation Front. He sang his own song, "Wait 'Til It Happens to You" at last year's General Assembly. Twenty-three hundred jammed the sanctuary to hear Nicky Cruz, former New York gang member turned crusade evangelist, after which 130 committed their lives to Christ.

Denny Rydberg, Christian Education Youth Minister, was leader of the Jesus People evangelistic thrust at the 183rd General Assembly. This faith is placed in the integrity and honesty of our fellowman.

But what has happened to our faith in our all-sufficient God?

On a Sunday evening three years ago, we received a call from the dean of the college in which our son, David, was a student. He told us that David had been killed that afternoon in a rock climbing accident on Mt. Cannon in New Hampshire.

We were stunned. Shock gave way to feelings of terrible hurt and the heartbreaking realization that we would never see David again on this earth.

Suddenly we were face to face with the very big question: Would the faith in our Lord which we all professed prove too intangible and unseen to fill our desperate need? Would it be inadequate for this crisis? Would our only comfort come from our friends and family?

In the face of overwhelming grief it is easy to see why so many young people, particularly, are drawn into groups which claim outward manifestations and signs proving the power and reality of God.

For many years First Church volunteers have staffed a large canteen for servicemen one Sunday each month. In 28 years, 116,000 servicemen have committed their lives to Chirst after hearing gospel messages at this center.

As remarkable as anything is the fact that in 1971 First Church financial receipts exceeded the budget by $26,000 in a year when denominational stewardship was seriously curtailed. All commitments were met, and this church now operates on a two-month emergency reserve fund; just three years ago the budget was hand-to-mouth.

Individuals, seeing God's work in the church, have contributed many special gifts. Some of the largest were given anonymously. At Christmas time a $100 bill was slipped under the church office door.

"Remarkable!" responded Dr. Mayo. "God has prospered us. And building on faith, we optimistically look to the future."

Marinites Fly To Dedication In Panama

Attending the weekend dedication and the faith's international conference on Monday and Tuesday will be Mel and Karen Magliocco, Earnest and Sue Jones, Deanna Folster and Christie Heller, San Rafael; Wayne Lenhard of Terra Linda; Carol Noah and daughter, Kelly, of Lucas Valley; Carol Reyes of San Anselmo; Maria del Carmen Ryes of Ross; Diane Maghzi of Mill Valley; Vicky Thompson and Diane Edwards of Novato, and Red Chandler and Greg Edwards of Point Reyes.

Following the dedication, a Baha'i Intercontinental Conference will be held in Panama City and will be attended by the Marin Baha'is.

Some four thousand Baha'is from around the world, including about 800 Baha'is from the United States, are expected to attend.

The Baha'i House of Worship in Panama will be the fifth such in the world. Others are located at or near Frankfurt, Germany; Sydney, Australia; Kampala, Uganda, and Wilmette, Ill.

The Panama Temple is the first completely round building in Panama and has cost over $1 million. It is located seven miles north of Panama City atop the 738 foot Cerro Sonsonate (Singing Mountain).

The edifice's base is an elongated nine-pointed star in the center of which is an auditorium and balcony area. A parabolic dome covers both the auditorium and balcony areas. It is made of reinforced concrete and the dome will be covered with mosaic tiles. The design on the exterior star points is pre-Columbian.

The National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the Republic of Panama is host for the dedication and conference.

The Baha'i Faith is a world religion that originated in Persia in 1844, and is presently established in over 317 countries and territories.

The National Baha'i Center is in Wilmette, and the Baha'i World Center is located on Mount Carmel in the Holy Land.

An all-night Vigil of Reparation and Prayer for Peace will be held May 5 and 6 at the Dominican Convent Chapel on Grand Avenue in San Rafael.

It is being sponsored by the Blue Army of Our Lady of Fatima, Legion of Mary and the Third Order of Mary in Marin County.

A Latin Mass at 8 p.m. on May 5 will open the vigil. It will be followed by a benediction, enrollment in the Brown Scapular and will conclude with a Latin Mass at 5 a.m. on May 6.

Rev. George Kathrein, CSR, will be in charge of the vigil which will also include a rosary, stations of the cross, homilies and meditations.

Asks Application For 'God's Power'

MINNEAPOLIS (UPI) — The purpose and mission of the church in the world is to bring God's power to bear in all human life, says Dr. Kent S. Knutson, president of the American Lutheran Church.

In an address to the C-400 Club of Concordia College, Moorhead, Minn., Dr. Knutson said God's power should be projected and applied by the college to serve the needs of all men. "Man's life is thus shaped by values which embody the Judeo-Christian tradition," he said.

Catholic Scholars Join Bible Group

NEW YORK (UPI)—Two Roman Catholic scholars have become the first of their faith to become members of the Joint Committee which sponsors "The New English Bible" in Great Britain, says the Oxford University Press.

They are Bishop B. C. Butler, auxiliary Bishop to the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster and President of St. Edmund's College at Ware, and Father James Foley of St. Peter's College, Cardross. Bishop Butler represents the Catholic Church in England and Father Foley the Church in Scotland. Hitherto, Catholics have been observers of the work of the "New English Bible" translation but not full members of the committee.

FACULTY REJECTS SCRIPTURE PLANS

Concordia Teachers Unanimously Reject Synod Leader's Proposal; No Dialogue

ST. LOUIS (LC) — The faculty of Concordia Seminary here, firmly rejecting "guidelines" for scriptural interpretation aid down by Dr. J.A.O. Preus, president of the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, has issued a statement sharply criticizing the church leader for not discussing his concerns with them.

A statement which received "virtually unanimous" approval from the 48 faculty members declared that the guidelines are "invalid both as an assessment and a solution of the presumed problems at the seminary."

The faculty declaration scored Dr. Preus for not "sharing his concerns with us," and stated that "for more than a year" the synod president declined "repeated invitations to meet with us about concerns we have had about his dealings with us."

"We do not consider the positions rejected in President Preus' statement to be descriptive of our teaching," the faculty members said.

The synod president had prepared a lengthy statement defining principles for interpreting scripture an distributed the statement throughout the 2.8 million member denomination. Dr. Preus' statement contained a catalog of positions which he said synod doctrine "rejected."

"It is a gross injustice to us," the faculty paper said; "to permit anyone to infer that the faculty of this seminary holds the views rejected" in Dr. Preus' document.

Dr. Preus said he was "deeply disappointed" in the faculty response, and added that in raising "procedural" questions, "the faculty has once again evaded the basic theological issue."

"Perhaps there are so many varying viewpoints within the faculty that the faculty is completely ineffective to address itself as a group to the theological issues as I have requested," the synod president stated.

The issue of doctrinal orthodoxy at Concordia, the largest Lutheran seminary in the United States has been smoldering for several years. A fact-finding committee made an intensive investigation into teaching at the school, and has made its report to the synod president. Presumably, Dr. Preus' statement is based on the report of the fact-finding committee.

That same report was given to the seminary's board of control, and the faculty complained that President Preus "should not have reported to the synod on a matter that is in the hands of the seminary's board of control before presented a report to him."

The faculty statement said it feared that President Preus "on his own initiative is now endeavoring to set up a standard for the Board of Control to follow."

Early this year, the synod president, the board, and seminary president Dr. John Tietjen clashed over the rehiring of Dr. Arlis Ehlen, a professor of Old Testament. Dr. Preus contended that the professor's views were in conflict with synodical teaching and demanded that he be dropped from the faculty. The board, however, rehired Dr. Ehlen for one year, and Dr. Tietjen declined to obey a directive from President Preus ordering him to see that Dr. Ehlen did not teach any classes in scripture.

Dr. Preus then issued his "guidelines" which call for a strictly literal interpretation of the Bible, and requested a faculty response.

Besides asserting that the president's "guidelines" do not accurately reflect the teaching at the school, the faculty contended that the synod's president's statement is unnecessary, the procedure he used in making it improper, and that the "guidelines" make "binding dogma out of mere theological opinion."

That last allegation may lead to further conflicts between Dr. Preus and the faculty, since the synod president contended that "every sentence in these theses is derived directly from the Scriptures and the Lutheran Confessions."

The faculty statement disagreed, arguing that Dr. Preus' declaration contains views on which neither Scripture nor the Lutheran Confessions have spoken definitively. They also suggested that Dr. Preus was unable to provide a biblical or confessional basis for some assertions in his "guidelines."

At the close of their statement, the faculty asserted that distributing the synod president's "guidelines" throughout the synod was a divisive tactic, and that the distribution "has caused disturbances in congregations and in the synod at large."

The faculty added that the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod has been marked throughout 125 years of history, for its "unqualified acknowledgement of the primacy of the Gospel."

Patience Difficult To Practice

By LOUIS CASSELS
By U. P. International

The dictionary defines patience as "calm endurance of a trying situation or person."

It is a virtue we readily commend to others. But some of us find it exceedingly difficult to practice.

One is putting up with people who annoy us, bore us, interrupt our work, make unreasonable demands, talk too much or otherwise grate on our nerves.

The Apostle Paul, who recognized that he personally had only a tenuous grip on this virtue, spoke of patience as a form of love.

"Love is patient and kind," he said. "It is not irritable or resentful ... Love bears all things, endures all things."

Impatient people sometimes seek to justify their irritable responses by pointing out they were subjected to severe provocation. But the Bible does not regard this ever as a sufficient excuse. It is precisely the most trying people, the scriptures insist, to whom we owe the greatest patience.

"Be patient toward ALL men," Paul admonished the early Christians at Thessalonica.

But patience means more than maintaining a kindly tolerance toward difficult people. Both in dictionary definitions and scriptural usage, the word also denotes a cheerfully resigned acceptance of situations.

This kind of patience is especially important to people who are chronically or incurably ill, crippled or otherwise burdened with physical handicaps. A prayer for the sick written more than 400 years ago and still used in Episcoal and other Anglican churches, includes these words:

"O Father of mercies and God of all comfort, our only help in time of need; We humbly beseech thee to behold, visit, and relieve thy sick servant ... and give him patience under his affliction."

The third type of patience which the Bible mentions is patience with God.

Although the tendency is perhaps more pronounced in our day, men always have been inclined to be impatient with God. They cannot understand why he does not intervene more promptly and pervasively to right the wrongs of the world. Many of the Psalms of the Old Testament are cries of impatience to a God who seems to tarry overlong in coming to the rescue of those who trust in Him.

"I am worn out, Lord, waiting for you to save me," complains the writer of the 119th Psalm. And the 141st Psalm says peremptorily:

"I call to you, Lord; help me NOW."

But another psalmist warns that men who would know God and walk in His ways must learn to "wait patiently" for Him to reveal Himself and His will.

"The Lord is all that I have; therefore I will wait for him patiently. It is good to wait in patience and sigh for deliverance by the Lord."

Characteristically, Biblical writers never try to explain, much less to justify, God's refusal to intervene instantly in every situation where His help is sought. They might have pointed out that if He did so, human beings would lose the dignity of free choice which is theirs by virtue of living in a relatively stable natural world where "the rain falls on the just and the unjust alike."

But they never tried to offer excuses for God as modern theologians so often feel impelled to do. It was suffient for them that He was the Lord God Almighty, creator, sustainer and sovereign ruler of the universe.

Community Impact Teams Take To Field

I-J Special Reports

PACIFIC GROVE (LC) — "Community Impact" teams infiltrated the Carmel-Monterey area todayduring the 54th convention of the California and Nevada District of The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, which ends tomorrow.

Impact teams will participate in various forms of outreach to varying communities:

Traditional canvass of an integrated neighborhood.

Mingle with military personnel in different locations.

Meet residents of retirement communities.

Assume the role of a sidewalk reporter, complete with tape recorder and microphone.

Relate with college students.

Invite people to join a guitar-playing team in a "sing-along."

Attract passersby to artists painting religious scenes.

Hand out smile buttons, Scripture portions, and other material.

The "Community Impact" feature was planned today to implement the convention theme, "Come See ... Go Tell." Rev. Paul W. F. Harms, director of drama at Concordia Senior College, Fort Wayne, Ind., was to explore the theme in a four-part essay.

Other featured speakers at the convention were to be Dr. R. P. Wiedersaenders of St. Louis, first vice president of The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, and Dr. Oliver Harms of St. Louis, immediate past president of the church body which includes Marin churches.

The convention began Thursday and will conclude tomorrow.

Civil Ceremonies

MANILA (UPI)—Filipino city dwellers prefer being married in civil ceremonies rather than in church, says a sociological study by the University of the Philippines. The study covered 362 couples selected randomly from different social classes in Manila and nearby Quezon City.

Service To Be Directed By Laymen

Lay members of Shepherd of the Hills Lutheran Church in Tiburon will have charge of tomorrow's 10 a.m. service.

Leonard Peck will be the liturgist and will conduct the service.

Lt. Cmd. Dolph Jaeger will be the lector and Dr. Kenneth Borchardt will deliver the sermon.

According to Rev. R. D. Lechleitner, church pastor, "The Lutheran principle of the priesthood of all believers has influenced the practices in the church through the centuries."

"Some of the national church bodies have been structured to place laymen in control of program and policy decisions," he added.

"This special service will reemphasize this," he concluded.

Lutheran Seminary Enrollments Drop

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Lutheran Council in the USA reports that enrollment in Lutheran seminaries in the United States and Canada declined slightly in 1971 while enrollment in Lutheran four-year colleges increased about 2 per cent.

A total of 4,290 students are enrolled at 20 Lutheran seminaries in both countries, compared with 4,598 in 1970.

Glove Question Enters Painter's Fatal Plunge

By PAUL E. PETERZELL

The death of a painter who fell last week from the Golden Gate Bridge may have been prevented if bridge officials had issued painters canvas gloves instead of cheaper rubber gloves, a director the bridge district said yesterday.

Director Daniel F. Del Carlo, secretary-treasurer of the San Francisco Building Trades Council, said rubber gloves were issued instead of canvas "because they're cheaper." He said it was "the first time I ever heard of painters using rubber gloves; rubber gloves are not safe."

Other district officials, however, quickly stressed that the painter did not have his safety strap fastened when he fell. They declined to specualte on whether the painter might have had a better chance of holding on to something as he fell if he had been wearing canvas instead of rubber gloves.

Andy Leroy Caton, 30, of Petaluma, fell to his death on April 20.

He was the second painter to die in a fall from the bridge since it opened almost 35 years ago. That first accident was five years ago, and triggered charges of negligence against bridge officials.

The 1967 fall took the life of Lee R. Patrick of San Anselmo. He fell when his scaffold gave way and his safety line was severed by a bridge girder as he fell.

A San Francisco coroner's jury, however, ruled that Patrick's death was accidental — but urged bridge officials to make sure their safety regulations were being followed.

Two painters were injured seriously in 1965 and 1961, and painters union officials also blamed both of those accidents on bad equipment.

Del Carlo, raising the issue before the full board, won prompt agreement to have the district's entire safety program checked by the building and operating committee, which he chairs. He said that some of the district's safety equipment may be found to be obsolete.

The district's attorney, Thomas M. Jenkings, objected to "any implication" that safety standards were not being met, and Gen. Mgr. Dale W. Luehring said there "never has been a dollar compromise" on safety.

Del Carlo, clearly implying that canvass gloves give a better grip than rubber gloves, said the difference in price between them was "peanuts."

The district's senior projects engineer, Glen A. Wallis, told newsmen that "we don't know why he fell, but if he had had his safety belt fastened, he would have stood a better chance of surviving." He said it still was unknown whether Caton slipped or possibly "passed out."

District officials and the painters union still were investigating, Wallis said.

The rubber gloves are issued painters as part of their rain gear, he said.

They are worn to keep painters' hands dry when washing down sandblasted steel, and when sandblasting to protest their skin.

Terminal Plan For Sausalito Supported

A master plan envisioning two Sausalito ferry terminals and parking facilities costing up to $5.7 million was endorsed unanimously but "tentatively" yesterday by Golden Gate Bridge District directors.

Several directors objected that almost half of the cost would be for parking facilities that the city should build, not the district. Some also questioned whether the terminals still would not be too costly for the district.

The unanimous vote, however, was on the basis that the endorsement only was to get the plan before Sausalito city officials for their comment.

San Rafael Mayor C. Paul Bettini, who led objections to the plan, also questioned whether the city would be willing to sell the district the anticipated downtown waterfront terminal site. He cited the terminals as "a luxury program rather than being practical."

Bettini also challenged the necessity of a second terminal in northern Sausalito and the propriety of joining with private property owners in commercial development of the Marinship area.

The plan, reported in detail in Wednesday's Independent-Journal, was drawn by Environmental Planning and Design Associates of Sausalito. The downtown terminal would displace both the Sausalito Yacht Club and the old ferry Berkeley with new fill covering about 14,000 square feet.

Golden Gate Bridge District Board Also:

CHILDREN — Cut children's bus fares between Marin or Sonoma and San Francisco to 25 cents for ages 6 through 12 as of June 1, and eliminated fares for children under 6 on the Sausalito ferry.

GROOVY — Received a report from Dist. Engineer Robert E. Shields that he soon will recommend cutting grooves into the road deck of the bridge to improve skid resistance.

LARKSPUR — Granted a $134,940 contract to the San Francisco architectural and planning firm of Braccia-Debrer-Heglund to do the first phase of a master plan for the Larkspur ferry terminal.

EASTSHORE — Authorized the district's attorney, Thomas M. Jenkins, to "make an offer" to Eastshore Lines to extend to the firm district subsidies for charter bus service to areas of San Francisco not served by the district's bus fleet. The bus company, which has been operating charter service between Marin and downtown San Francisco, complained of unfair competition. The authorization was granted after a 25-minute closed-door session called by Jenkins to discuss "potential litigation" against the district by Eastshore.

FORK LIFT — Bought a fork lift truck from Elder and Co. of Hayward for $8,794, and a front end loader from Contractors Machinery Co. of San Jose for $8,894.

North Bay Chapter Election Is Set

Injuries Minor In Auto Crash

A 25-year-old Merced man suffered minor injuries last night when he drove into a signal light in Greenbrae reportedly to avoid a car that swerved in front of him.

Donald J. Brandt told the California Highway Patrol that the car cut him off on eastbound Sir Francis Drake Boulevard at the Bon Air Shopping Center.

Brandt said he would see his own physician. The accident was at 10:10 p.m.

Heroin Sale Brings Time Behind Bars

A 27-year-old Sausalito woman, who claimed she was only flirting with heroin, was sentenced in Marin Superior Court Thursday to six months in jail for selling $30 of the drug to a narcotics agent last year.

Judge Samuel W. Gardiner also placed Felicia Mary Fouche on three years probation, but delayed execution of the sentence until an appeal. Her attorney filed the appeal after sentencing.

Gardiner had found her guilty last month of the sale Sept. 28 on a houseboat at Gate 5, Sausalito. Attorneys had submitted the case for Gardiner's decision on the basis of evidence heard at a preliminary hearing in municipal court.

She told a probation officer it was the first time she had sold heroin and claimed she shunned the drug scene following her arrest. The woman has a previous record of drug arrests.

Teacher's Plea To Drop Counts Rejected

A Marin Superior Court judge yesterday rejected an effort by the attorney for Kenneth A. Anderson, suspended Tamalpais High School teacher, to have the charges dismissed.

Attorney Carl B. Shapiro argued that the allegations against Anderson were not specific enough and that state law had altered procedures for firing teachers. The Tamalpais High School District hasn't followed those new procedures, which include a full hearing before the board, Shapiro said.

However, Judge E. Warren McGuire overruling Shapiro's request, said the charges were specific enough and added that the new state law governing teacher evaluation and hiring and firing did not go into effect until after the present legislature adjourns.

Anderson, a tenured English teacher, was suspended last week when a charge of immoral conduct was added to two original allegations against him.

They are unfitness for service and persistent violation of and/or refusal to obey school rules.

Specifically, the charges include "encouraging, condoning and participating in illegal acts by student Bruce (Paul) Lohmann," a one-time student of Anderson who confessed last April to three bombings in Southern Marin, including one at the school.

Anderson, a 31-year-old former professional baseball player, was removed from teaching duties last May, but worked as an assistant to the school principal until his suspension.

Since he is tenured, he cannot be fired until a superior court judge rules that the charges justify it. Depositions were to be taken today preparatory to the required court proceeding.

Petaluma Youth Is Pot Suspect

An 18-year-old Petaluma youth was arrested Thursday night on suspicion of possessing marijuana and drug paraphernalia after he was stopped for slamming on his brakes loudly in the parking lot of a Larkspur market.

James Reed Aggas of 74 Sprauer Road was booked into Marin County Jail where he posted $500 bail. He is to appear in Marin Municipal Court Monday.

Police said that after he was stopped, an officer noticed cigarette papers in his shirt pocket. There also turned out to be a plastic bag of green vegetable matter in the pocket, police said.

Cyclist Hurt In Collision

Robert Fred Wunder of 1301 Second Street suffered a sprained right ankle in the 9 p.m. accident, the hospital reported.

The car was driven by Frank T. Garvin, 25, of 125 North San Pedro Road, San Rafael.

Ship Models Recall The Past History Of The Sea Voyagers

said. "They're usually a labor of love."

He prizes the Bradbury models because of their detail. He owns replicas of the Golden Hind, 1577, and Revenge, both ships commanded by Sir Francis Drake, the Mayflower, 1620, and the U.S.S. Constitution, 1812.

The ships are as exact as it is possible to make them. "I'm sure he (Bradbury) got the plans from the British admiralty," said Choklat.

"You know it's exact when a model builder goes into showing people with details on their cuffs and collars," he said.

Bradbury's model of the Mayflower, for example, has figures of the crew standing on deck. One man is holding a copy of a sea chart in his hands, and a plan of the then-known world is clearly visible.

Pilgrim costumes, complete with cuffs, collars and boots, adorn the sailors.

Detail on the ships is equally exact. Coats-of-arms on shields are lashed to the gunwales of the Revenge to signify which knights are on board.

The painted designs on Drake's ship the Golden Hind are faithfully reproduced. The Constitution's copper bottom is there, and rigging is as precise on the model as captains on the actual vessels kept it.

Deck seams are evident, as are windlasses and other deck hardware.

Choklat said he believes Bradbury first formed the hulls, probably from a block of pine, then built upon them. He said he does not know what scale the models are constructed to.

He classes himself as an amateur collector and said he got started on the hobby while searching for some sort of ship model to put in the entranceway to a yacht club to which he belongs.

Choklat, 46, is a Pan American airline executive, and travels extensively. He said he kept watching for models which were worth acquiring, but found it a tough search. In London, he said, where one would expect to find many, he has found only Bradbury's models.

The shopkeepers at Hummel have provided him only with a brief clipping from the Times of London showing a picture of the old man, holding one of his models. "They told us that his health was very poor," said Choklat. He is supposedly in his late 80s and began his model-building late in life.

Attempts by Choklat's wife, Mary, to trace Bradbury through the Times of London story have failed, she sad.

After a recent move to his Sausalito-based yacht from Palo Alto, Choklat has found a difficulty. "They (the models) just won't fit in with our way of life," he said.

He wants to sell them. "You can't even go to sea with them," he explained.

He prefers that they be sold to some type of institution where they can be seen and appreciated by more persons than just their owner.

"Models are worth what a collector wants to pay for them," he said. He estimated that these are worth a minimum of $1,000 apiece.

He can be reached through P.O. Box 551, Sausalito.

Agenda Includes Hub Apartments

The San Anselmo Planning Commission will consider a request by Marius Cordone that would allow an additional 10 apartment units on his property when the commission meets Monday at 8 p.m. at city hall.

Cordone is requesting to rezone 45 feet of his property at 1310-1340 Sir Francis Drake Boulevard to R-3 (multiple-apartment). The added footage would allow him to build 41 apartment units on the property instead of the 31 as currently planned, according to John O'Rourke of the planning staff.

The 45 feet is currently zoned R-1 (residential single-family), O'Rourke said.

Girl, 16, Is Director Of Campaign

Mary Connor Limont, a junior at Marin Catholic High School, acknowledged this will be her first political campaign, but predicted that electing French to Congress would be only a prelude to getting him elected President.

She said that Marin campaign headquarters will open Monday in the Frank Howard Allen real estate office in Greenbrae at 505 Sir Francis Drake Boulevard. She and other volunteers will man staff the office from 3 to 5 p.m. weekdays, she said.

French, a 25-uear-old Army veteran, is competing for the nomination with San Francisco Superivsor Roger Boas. The district, which includes all of Marin and portions of San Francisco, is represented by Republican William S. Mailliard of San Francisco. He is unopposed for the Republican nomination.

Solano County Girl Hurt In Accident

Kim Tomlinson, 17 of Dixon, Solano County, was treated at Hillcrest Hospital Thursday for right knee cuts suffered in a two-car accident at 3:55 p.m. on Valley Ford Road near Roblar Road, west of Petaluma.

The California Highway Patrol said she was a passenger in a car driven by William C. Clause III, 17, of Dixon, which collided with a car driven by Robert T. Martin, 17, of 1433 Joan Drive, Petaluma.

Larkspur Council Has Busy Agenda

Larkspur City Council will meet twice next week, Monday night to continue the hearing on grading Little King Mountain, and Wednesday night when it may name a new planning commissioner.

The Monday night meeting will begin at 8 p.m. in the all-purpose room of the Henry C. Hall School. It will be the second session on the appeal by the Adolph A. Tiscornia estate of the city planning commission's denial of a grading permit for the mountain. Mayor William G. Fleckles closed the last hearing, April 18, before those opposed to the grading had a chance to speak.

The council will conduct a regular business meeting Wednesday beginning at 8 p.m. in the city council chambers. City Manager Kent B. Bathurst said a new planning board member may be named.

Ad Hoc Committee Is Formed In Sleepy Hollow

A 40-member ad hoc committee has been formed by the Sleepy Hollow Homes Association to "take a look at the whole spectrum of community problems," according to association president Beau W. Chapman.

The committee was formed as a follow-up to the association's March 30 meeting when 250 homeowners met with a group of law enforcement representatives to discuss community concerns, Chapman said.

"But," he added, "we want to look into a lot of things, from upgrading youth activities to how to deal with repeat juvenile offenders."

The ad hoc committee will meet on its own for the next several weeks and is expected to report findings at a future meeting of the homes association, Chapman said.

The association also at its Thursday night meeting approved a $20,000 budget for 1972-73. Most income is expected to come from $40-a-year membership dues, Chapman said. The group has a membership of 320.

Key items in the budget are clubhouse pool maintenance, lifeguard salary, clubhouse nursery school operations, and donations to Pop Warner and Little League baseball, Chapman said.

MOBILE HOMES

The Plush Dwelling Sites

By MONTY HOYT
The Christian Science Monitor
News Service

(Last of three articles)

ELGIN, Ill. — "If anybody had told me two years ago that I'd be living in a mobile home today, I would have told them they were crazy," declares John Krohn, a retired electrician from Chicago.

Almost as a dare, he and his wife responeded to an ad about a mobile-home park: "I just didn't believe it could be as good as it said it said it was," he recalls, taking a short break from the pool table in a plush, $340,000 recreation center where he spends many hours in his newly adopted retirement community.

But it was not just any trailer park that made him change his mind. Willow Lake Estates, a planned, adult community beside the Fox River here west of Chicago, is one of 269 such superior-rated mobile home parks with landscaped lawns, heated swimming pools, and extensive recreational facilities that are beginning to spring up in the American countryside.

Despite the continuing development and upgrading of mobile home parks, the supply can hardly keep astride of demand, particularly in major metropolitan areas in the North. This leads to a restrictive market in many cases, where mobile-home owners are at the mercy of their landlords: Rents can be raised, eviction threats bandied about, and excessive entrance or moving fees charged.

"Parks are closed in many states unless the party buys their mobile home from the park operator," charges Mrs. Marge Dixon, secretary of the Michigan Mobile Home Owners Association.

"Once they've bought it, they're stuck with it," she maintains, noting that owners are forced to take their homes with them when they move, which can be prohibitively expensive even if they can find a new park, or else pay an exorbitant fee to leave the unit behind.

Since entrance fees to most parks can run into hundreds of dollars, "the mobile-home owner doesn't have a chance," she contends, paying whether they come, or go, or move their home.

This problem is compounded by the fact that not enough land is being zoned for mobile home parks — "and what is available is usually ghetto zoning," asserts Mrs. Jane Conrad, consumer director of the American Mobile Home Association, an owners group in Denver. She cautions prospective buyers to make sure they have a guaranteed space to put their home before they buy.

Howard Seyller, sales manager for the Willow Lake Estates in Elgin, says that it took a two-year battle with the zoning board and the planning commission before promoters got the city council to approve the park. That was eight years ago.

"Today everybody knows it's an asset to the community," he proudly announces.

The park, which pays the normal real estate tax, also paid to have its sewerage system and utilities put in, and paved its own streets. Residents of the park also pay a personal property tax on their mobile homes. Most of these tax monies go to support the local school system. Yet none of the 600 families has any school-aged child to add to the crowded schools.

"We've brought a good clientele to this area," Seyller declares about the semi-retirement park, which boasts five millionaires and has its own social director. "Still, if somebody came in here with a proposal for another park and guaranteed that it would be as good as ours, I'm certain the council would vote against it."

It is estimated that 40 per cent of the three million mobile homes in this country are located in parks (the majority are still situated on privately owned plots in rural areas). The Woodall Publishing Co., which puts out the mobile-home-park directory each year, rates 12,381 of the estimated 22,000 parks in this country in its 1972 edition.

Among these more up-to-date, rated parks there are more than one million spaces fo mobile homes, yet the parks average only a 5 per cent vacancy rate.

"Many of the new parks are spoken for before they've even started construction," says Curtis Fuller, president of Woodall Publishing.

"We've been rating mobile-home parks for 25 years. There is a continual up-grading of our standard, and parks are dropped from our directory because they don't meet our improving standard. Nothing has done more to obsolete some parks than the changes in the mobile-home models themselves," he declares.

The prejudices against mobile homes are breaking down increasingly, he maintains, as better parks are being built. "But it's a longtime proposition."

In the long run, the mobile home is likely to find even greater acceptance among those segments of the population with whom it already scores heavily — young and retired couples — and it may well develop popularity among two potential markets — minority families and second-home buyers.

But experts see this continuing boom prefaced by suitable protection for home-owners through stricter regulation and legislation and — perhaps most important — opening up adequate zoning.

INSIDE RUSSIA

The Seeds Of Discontent

By CHARLOTTE SAIKOWSKI
The Christian Science Monitor
News Service

"On the Russian sea, with its recent public agitation, a calm is about to descend. The flood tide of the leap year (1968), with its storms and tragedies, is being succeeded in the present leap year by an ebb tide, which brings with it apathy, exhaustion, and the need for rethinking."

MOSCOW — A tense uncertainty hangs over the Soviet protest movement. The mood is reflected in the above words from a recent letter to the Times of London by five Soviet dissenters expressing anxiety over the plight of their nation's dissident intellectuals.

The letter warns that a new campaign is being fueled against banned writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn, that nuclear physicist Andrie D. Sakharov, the civil-rights champion, is "no longer permitted graciously to attend court cases," that many intellectuals have been interrogated, and that an ill fate awaits Pyotr Yakir, the 49-year-old historian regarded as leader of the dissident community.

It notes, too, that such prominent dissenters as writers Andrie Sinyavsky and Yuli Daniel and poetess Natalya Gorbanvskaya are coming out of labor camps now. But while these and others are being returned to society, the authorities are attacking other "sources of likely trouble."

How far the regime's current assault on dissent will go remains to be seen. But it is causing deep reflection in dissident circles and again focuses attention on their bold struggle for human rights.

For the outside world this struggle is a subject for unending fascination. Hardly a day goes by but the Western press reports some event in the movement, be it the trial of a Moscow dissident, the arrest of a Ukrainian intellectual, or an appeal of the unofficial Human Rights Committee.

So much attention is in fact paid to the topic that the impression is sometimes conveyed that the Soviet Union is seething with political discontent. Nothing could be more misleading.

The plain truth is that the great mass of Russians hear of dissident activities, if at all, only from Western broadcasts. And the political influence of the dissenters is negligible.

Indeed, there was far more effective political dissent in prerevolutionary Czarist Russia than there is in the totalitarian Soviet state.

Yet the very fact that dissent exists in so highly controlled a society --and it has developed largely since the Khrushchev era —gives it a significance beyond its present small strength.

Kremlin authority is not challenged by the protest movement. But it is bothered by it, and it could well be a fear of its potential damage, as well as the growing irritation over it, that is behind the determination to move more forcefully against it.

What, exactly, is the "democratic movement"?

The term itself is misleading, for it implies an organized political opposition. That does not exist.

The "movement" is an amorphous agglomeration of individuals (mostly writers, scientists, and other members of the intelligentsia), tiny political circles, and small national minorities and religioss groups that have been persecuted by the regime and that seek a restitution of grievances or, in a broader sense, greater individual freedom and the administration of justice under Soviet law.

They circulate clandestine periodicals, sign letters and petitions, and occasionally stage a brief public demonstration. But their activities are uncoordinated, their objectives often differ, and their members can even be at loggerheads as to means and methods of protest.

How many people are involved in or touched by the movement is impossible to know (and this discussion excludes Soviet Jews seeking to emigrate to Israel).

One dissident spokesman estimates that the activists — those individuals who, for the sake of civil rights, are willing to risk their jobs and face terms in labor camps or psychiatric hospitals — number perhaps 200 or so. Many of these, like the writer Vladimir I. Bukovsky, now are imprisoned.

Another 1,000 or 1,500, the spokesman believes, help out in some way, although they do not "put themselves on the line." Still another 5,000 may be "sympathetic."

One evening a group of dissidents gathered at the home of Valery Chalidze, a co-founder of the Human Rights Committee, to celebrate the Georgian physicist's birthday. For the occasion, a table in the middle of the one-room apartment was laden with platefuls of cheese and fish sandwiches.

As the dissidents mingled with the few Western journalists present, several carloads of KGB (secret police) sat waiting and watching outside the apartment building. The atmosphere bristled with that unpleasant tension that always surrounds such encounters.

In quiet conversation one quickly learned that these dissenters have no hope of changing the Soviet system; they know that, given the country's centuries-old tradition of authoritarianism, liberalization of the regime will take place only slowly.

But they see themselves as spearheading the struggle for liberal reform.

What may not always be realized abroad is the large role played by the western press in keeping the dissidents' cause alive. Protesters have no legal means through which to report abuses of the law. They rely on Moscow based journalists to make these known abroad and thus indirectly to Soviet radio listeners.

Apart from the rare --and quickly dispersed —public street demonstration by a handful of dissidents and their supporters, there is no overt political action. (The sit-ins last year by Soviet Jews were an exception.)

At one time it was the practice for dissident intellectuals to send their signed protests or appeals to such persons of authority as Premier Alexei N. Kosygin, President Nikolai V. Podgorny, or the U.S.S.R. prosecutor-general, or to the United Nations.

But it was seldom known whether such communications ever reached their destination.

In the more recent past, the tactic has been to address "open" protests and to circulate copies to Western journalists for transmission abroad.

Such appeals might concern, for instance, a political trial that denied an individual due process, conditions in a labor camp, or the use of drugs to force political prisoners to change their beliefs.

One of the most significant developments in the protest movement has been the Human Rights Committee, an organization founded daringly more than a year ago by academician Sakharov and two other Moscow scientists.

Dedicated to the study of human rights problems and to "advising" the regime on the subject, the committee is not officially recognized. And it has only four full members.

But, insisting on operating openly, it has communicated with the International League for the Rights of Man in New York and other world groups and has acquired considerable symbolic value if no real authority.

That Soviet authorities have so far found it awkward to put down the Human Rights Committee is undoubtedly due to its distinguished membership. They have interrogated its members and confiscated some of its documents. But why they have not suppressed the operations of the small band of lesser known dissidents has been harder to explain.

Until now, the KGB has acted with relative restraint, largely, it is thought, because certain party leaders have been unwilling to give it a free hand.

Dissidents themselves suggest that the regime has not wanted to create an atmosphere of fear in the country by a return to mass arrests, that it is more sensitive to world opinion these days, and that it can keep better track of political "misfits" by allowing them a measure of freedom.

However, the active protest movement now appears to face a severe challenge. Since the beginning of the year there has been a visible crackdown on dissent, as epidenced in the severe prison sentence meted out to Vladimir Bukovsky, arrests in the Ukraine, and raids on the homes of Moscow and Leningrad dissidents.

Among the apartments thoroughly searched was that of Yakir. So far, this active civil rights campaigner, a man with a thick graying beard who spent many years in prison camps under Stalin, has been spared KGB repression, presumably because of his family connections. (His father was a respected military commander shot during the Stalin purges.) But he is currently under heavy surveillance.

Another straw in the wind is the regime's reported decision to suppress the Chronicle of Current Events, an extraordinary underground newssheet that has been published clandestinely every two months since the spring of 1968.

It now is believed the regime is trying to silence the hard-core protesters either by jailing them or inducing them to emigrate.

Meanwhile, to what extent Soviet citizens morally support the nonconformists in their society is a relevant but difficult question to answer. The broad masses, certainly, are politically apathetic and even resent any disturbance of a rebellious nature.

But there is a growing body of well-educated, sophisticated intellectuals who would welcome democratization of the system.

These are people who, although they would never risk their careers to defy the authorities, listen avidly to foreign broadcasts, read typewritten manuscripts of Solzhenitsyn's works, and silently cheer when an eminent figure like Dr. Sakharov or cellist Mstislav Rostropovich boldly speaks out against an injustice.

"How important are people like Vladimir Bukovsky?" I asked a university scholar.

The Russian, who has not so much as seen a copy of the underground Chronicle, was thoughtful.

"Extremely important," he replied, "They won't change things here, but they do add to that overall pressure on the government that will gradually force it to become more liberal."

Carrying Tips For Safety Sake

There comes a time in every do-it-yourselfer's life when he finds it necessary to transport lumber or the like in his passenger vehicle in order to get home to finish his project.

The following is offered in order that it may be done safely and legally. Section 35111 of the California Vehicle Code states, "no passenger vehicle shall be operated on any highway with any load carried thereon extending beyond the line of the fenders on the left side or more than six inches beyond the line of the fenders on its right side". When you are considering putting that piece of lumber in such a position that it hangs out the window remember this article.

For those that prefer to put the projecting items in the trunk of a car, the back of a stationwagon, or in the back of a truck section 24604 of the California Vehicle Code reads as follows: "Whenever the load upon any vehicle extends, or whenever any integral part of any vehicle projects, to the rear four feet or more beyond the bed or body of the vehicle, there shall be displayed at the extreme end of the load a red flag or cloth not less than 16 inches square.

During the hours of darkness or when visibility is reduced two red lights of an approved type must be mounted in place of the red flag or cloth.

Section 35410 of the California Vehicle code advises that "the load upon any motor vehicle shall not extend to the rear beyond the last point of support for a greater distance than that equal to two-thirds of the length of the wheel base of the vehicle carrying such load.

Industrial Safety Chief Reports Action In Court

SACRAMENTO (UPI)—A legislative fact-finding committee was told yesterday that the state Division of Industrial Safety, under fire for assertedly being soft on employers, has sought eight prosecutions of contractors in the last 60 days.

This contrasted with six requests for prosecutions of employers for allegedly violating safety orders during 1970, during which 230,000 written violations were issued by the division.

The embattled division's newly appointed acting chief, Roy J. Bell, announced the beefed up requests for court action at a hearing of the Assembly Select Committee on Industrial Safety.

"Since the last meeting of this committee 60 days ago, we have initiated eight prosecutions," Bell testified. "Not all will be brought to a successful prosecution because that depends on the city attorney or the district attorney. But we have requested eight prosecutions."

The committee was appointed by Assembly Speaker Bob Moretti, D-Van Nuys, to investigate charges that the division was "employer-oriented" and top-level officials tended to look the other way when violations of safety orders were issued by field engineers.

The charges arose in the wake of the Sylmar Tunnel disaster last June 24 in which 17 workmen were killed.

Bell detailed for the committee actions he is taking to reorganize the division to make it more effective. He was appointed acting chief by Gov. Ronald Reagan when Jack Hatton abruptly resigned under committee and labor fire.

Among other things, Bell said, 31 new employes have been hired in the last two months, including 20 engineers, one attorney, a senior investigator, a graphic artist and eight clerks.

"I think you are doing a tremendous job of implementing," chairman Jack Fenton, D-Montebello, told Bell.

Fenton has been one of the division's most outspoken critics and has demanded the resignation of Bell's immediate superior, state Industrial Relations Director William Hern.

"We intend to see that the program works," Hern told Fenton.

"So do we, Mr. Hern," Fenton replied.

Bell said he has been told by high level Reagan administration officials that he will not be named permanent chief of the division. He currently is also the permanent administrative director of the state Division of Industrial Accidents.

Models Teach Mother, Child

By KENT GARLAND BURTT
The Christian Science Monitor News Service

The Mother-Child Home Program, operating here and in Glen Cove, sends toy demonstrators into the homes of young mothers twice a week to show them how to read or "picture-read" a book and how to play with a child over a new toy in the way most beneficial to the child's intellect. The demonstrators use a range of techniques which they encourage the mother to adopt when she takes over the play session.

The program is designed by Dr. Phyllis Levenstein, sponsored by the Family Service Association of Nassau County, and directed toward families in the low-income bracket.

DURING THE first home session with a lively 2-year-old girl named Gloria, the toy demonstrator told her mother, "Gloria spent most of the time racing around the room. But later in the year a film (prepared for trainees) shows Gloria scrambling eagerly up onto the counch between the toy demonstrator and her mother. When the demonstrator hands her a book Gloria says happily, "That's my book!" Which it is. Carefully chosen toys and books are given to the families because their presence in the home continues to promote the interchange of conversation between mother and children.

At the half-hour session Gloria's mother and the demonstrator take turns reading "Are You My Mother?" But the book is not just read through. At every page one of the adults pauses to ask Gloria a question, get her to point to something, or relate the picture to an event or object in her own experience. Her mother has obviously profited from the sessions because she and Gloria talk their way through the book.

When asked what came out of the egg, Gloria answers, "Cake." Without deprecating her mother simply corrects, "A bird."

TESTING DISCLOSED that this child made a gain of 25 points in her IQ. Dr. Levenstein's view is plain. "It does not take a college or a high school degree to know how to talk profitably to a child of 2 or 3. It has been said that talking itself is the 'original word game.' Scientific research has indicated that success in school is attributed in part to plenty of verbal interaction between parent and child in early childhood."

Dr. Levenstein reasons that enrichment of the disadvantaged "must contain a conspicuous language thrust and would be most effective at the period of early speech development."

She explains, "Intellect is based on the building of concepts. Ideas or concepts are fostered through language. Words fix images. If chilren from low-income homes are to move ahead in the world they must first have enough preschool cognitive enrichment to be able to utilize the equal educational opportunities available to them."

In the first year of the project children tested gained an average of 17 IQ points. Then nonprofessionals were assigned to be toy demonstrators. The gain was not as great in one year, but when the nonprofessionals continued with their children a second year it was found the children made the same average gain. So it was turned into a two-year program using volunteers and paid aides who are not professionals.

The first small participants now are in second grade, achieving at grade level and getting good behavior marks. The success of the program can be measured in other ways. Almost all the mothers stay in the program, which is completely voluntary, all the way through the year, rarely missing teir prearranged dates with the toy demonstrator. Satisfied mothers have spread the word and now there is a long waiting list of applicants, unlike the first year when a large proportion of families turned down the idea.

"We wanted to see if it would work," she said. "It did work, dramatically. Now we forget how radical then was the idea that IQs could be changed through learning experiences. It was important to add to the evidence."

The value of this unusual program is that instead of taking the child out of the home and thus perhaps making the mother feel inadequate, it strengthens the mother's effectiveness and dignity. She is considered her child's main teacher. Dr. Levenstein believes that "cognitive enrichment should be embedded in the child's relationships with beloved family figures, especially the mother." With the mother as the prime focus, the child's advancement later on in school will probably be reinforced by the wiser mother at home.

In a study made for the U.S. Office of Education last year by the American Institutes for Research, Dr. Levenstein's program was one of only 10 projects out of 326 "compensatory educational programs" across the nation labeled "successful." This spring the federal government will circulate in all school districts a description of the Mother-Child Home Program.

Eight other agencies are already using the program. They are family counseling agencies in Paterson, N.J., Newton, Mass., Norristown, Pa., Norwalk and Danbury, Conn., and Utica, N.Y. The Bureau of Indian Affairs has three tribes participating. Public school districts in rural Conway Springs, Kan., and industrial Pittsfield, Mass., are also using the program. Dr. Levenstein's office offers training, site visits, and follow-up consultation.

Dr. Levenstein beams when she talks about her work. "It's exciting and satisfying because it's a combination of everything I ever did," she says. She was first a teacher, then a social worker, then a clinical psychologist. She is also a mother. She got her doctorate in an interdisciplinary study of the family.

The only cloud on her professional horizon seems to be the question of what will happen when federal funds from the National Institute of Mental Health terminate in 1973. Demand for dissemination will grow as news of this successful program spreads, and dissemination is costly.

A Baby Bear Rug

Clinically speaking, nurse your career along.

There are a lot of inducements to furthering your civilian career at the 6253d U.S. Army Hospital. At the present time, the Medical Reserve has a critical need for nurses (especially those coming off active duty), clinical specialists, operating room specialists, dental specialists, and a host of nonmedical enlisted specialties.

For nurses with a 3-year diploma who want to complete that vital last year of college, the Army Reserve is a great way to earn college money: as much as a fifth week's pay a month for one weekend meeting; optional active duty for school and short refresher courses with full pay and tax-free allowances; and one annual training period yearly, usually at a major Army Hospital.

For enlisted medical specialties, both prior-service personnel and new enlistees can take advantage of the Army Reserve's intensive training program. If you take clinical specialist training, after completion you qualify to take the licensed vocational nurse (LVN) exam. LVN's are in great demand... in many hospitals, LVN starting pay is $600-$700 monthly. Army Reserve training in the other medical specialties will similarly boost the demand for your skills in civilian life.

Why not take a very clinical look at what the Army Reserve can do for you? If you'd like to be healthier, wealthier, and wiser. The Army Reserve.

GENERATION RAP

by Helen and Sue Bottel

Helen Cannot Tell A Lie, Read Her Married Daughter's Letter

DEAR RAP:

I beg to differ with Helen's answer to "Justified Liar," who kept her small children from a dangerous river with tales of a big bad wolf down there.

You asked, Helen, "How many times later on did the kids privately question the mother's truthfulness?"

I grew up with a "troll" who lived at the edge of a big dam and kept all the little kids away. That fear was a delicious mixture of fairy tale and just enough belief to control our flirtation with danger. Like Santa Clause, the "terrible troll" didn't build distrust of our parents. We played their game — and it was much better than the spankings we might have got — or maybe a funeral with us as star performers.

That psychology stuff sounds great, but Mama Helen, can you truthfully say you never told a little white lie to protect your kids from harm? — UN-DROWNED AND UN-PSYCHED

DEAR UN AND UN:

I cannot tell a lie. Read on: — HELEN

DEAR HELEN:

I was rather surprised at your answer to the mother who told her children fibs to keep them from drowning.

When my family lived in woodsy, remote southern Oregon, I too was warned of the "bad beasties" who lurked on the river's edge, waiting to eat up little girls who romed alone. I too was mightily "alarmed" at the "legend of Big Bear" — he caught little girls wandering away from home and sat on them!

You know, every time my brothers took me to the river (with parental okay), I kept them a little ahead of me to "tell the beasties I'm not alone!" And when I did venture waterward (a kid must test even if she only braves fifty steps on the river path) I went well armed — with my mother's police whistle, my brother's cap pistol, a big stick, pockets full of stones —and my nurse's kit. Just in case.

As far as I can see, the only harm all this has done is to instill in me a holy respect for big bears. And what's to regret about that?

You see, I was the "victim" of parents who loved me enough to keep me from harm, and I believe they did a fantastic job of raising me, my two older brothers, and my little sister, Sue. I plan to raise my own family likewise, tempering discipline with fun, a bit of fantasy and a lot of love!

So, think back on the olden days, (Ah, how soon we forget our "follies") — for there is no reason to regret telling such "altruistic lies." They never hurt us, and we've never thought you wrong. — thank you, mother — Your loving (married) daughter, KATHY.

DEAR KAT:

My cup runneth over! Thank you, daughter dear, for I always felt a spot of guilt about "Sitting Bear," — Your loving mother, HELEN

DEAR HELEN AND SUE:

It might seem like a small problem, but it's terrible to me. My ears stick out. I mean they really flap! I try to wear my hair so they won't show, but it's impossible. I'm mocked and called "Dumbo." Help! — E.A.R.

DEAR E.:

Surgery can solve your problem. And it's well worth the price if it saves a lifetime of embarrassment. We hope your parents agree! — HELEN AND SUE

The Chemise Is Making Comeback

It is new, sensuous and sexy, according to fashion designer Luba, who has many chemise dresses in soft sweater knits for the fall collection she opens informally next week.

Luba said she prefers the chemise as a casual shirt, clinging at the hips and tapering slightly at the hem.

Rudi Gernreich Fashion Story

The Rudi Gernreich fashion story starts in Vienna where Rudi, as a child, became familiar with his aunt's salon de couture. Even at a tender age he knew they were the kinds of clothes he did not want to make. He came to America in 1938 and became an American citizen five years later, when he was 21. He likes to do uncomplicated clothes— the most uncomplicated of all being the topless bathing suit.

SEW SIMPLE

Fold Line Should Be Removed Before Cutting

By EUNICE FARMER
(Register and Tribune Syndicate)

DEAR EUNICE,

Once again I am faced with the problem of a permanent crease in summer fabrics. Naturally, the ugly crease always appears at the center front of my dresses. What can be done to remove it?

MRS. S. S.

DEAR MRS. S.S.,

The fold line in fabrics continues to annoy retailers as well as customers. One expert opinion that works most of the time, in fact if it doesn't, there is probably no solution, is the following. Incidentally, the crease has no relation to the age of the fabric, but instead, with the finish.

Permanent press fabrics are the worst offenders. Always test your experiments on the end of the fabric in case it doesn't work. The crease must always be removed before the garment is cut because if it can't be removed, you will have to re-fold the fabric and create a new fold line which avoids the original fold.

Try mixing an equal amount of water and white distilled vinegar. Soak and squeeze out a man's handkerchief or any lightweight underlining fabric. Use this as a press cloth over the line and press with a fairly warm iron, not hot. Pressing should be done on the wrong side of the fabric. Any vinegar odor will disappear after fabric dries.

We must always remember that with each new miracle in fabrics, we must face a few liabilities. Permanent press and no iron fabrics are much more difficult to change once a crease has been folded or pressed.

DEAR EUNICE,

In a recent column you mented a "caftan" which could be made by following simple instructions. I guess I'm not very sophisticated because I have no idea what you are talking about and what a caftan looks like. I am very intrigued by the whole thing and would like more information.

MRS. N.D.

DEAR MRS. N.D.,

Technically, a caftan refers to a long, flowing tunic that originated in Turkey and Egypt.

I think it is marvelous as a cover up for a bathing suit as well as a glamorous lounging outfit.

My directions are very simple to follow. A Caftan is perfect for beach or bedroom, easy to pack, and once you make one, you'll never want to be without one. You may receive our easy-to-make instructions for the "Super-Caftan" by sending a long- self-addressed, stamped envelope plus 25 cents to Eunice Farmer in care of this paper with your request. It is a "must" for the season coming up, and it also makes a great gift.

Would you believe, I saw one made in terry cloth with heavy braid trims in the men's department in New York at a cost of well over $50? So you see, they can be appropriate for everyone in your family, male or female, regardless of age.

TAILOR TRIX WINNER

"Along with most of my friends, I always had difficulty getting the neck edges to come out even when sewing on the back neck facing, until I discovered the following solution. First, apply the zipper (if one is used) and then machine stitch across the center back a distance of about one inch each side of the center back exactly on the 5/8 inch seamline. After sewing this guideline, clip the center back apart. Use this machine-stitched line as a guide in sewing on the back facings and they will come out even every time. This method also works perfectly when stitching the waistband on to skirts or slacks."

DEAR EUNICE, Do you believe in taping seams of knitting garments to prevent stretching?

MRS. N.R.

DEAR MRS. N.R.,

There is a difference of opinion. I have found that by inserting tape in seams, the seamline often becomes too rigid and actually loses it's flexibility that is compatible with the way knits should look.

At a recent seminar I attended, it was suggested that before stitching the shoulder seams together (the most important area to keep in shape), you pull out the bobbin and top thread together, the length of the shoulder seam.

Next, place the seam to be stitched in your machine, place these two threads directly over the seamline, and machine stitch over them with a small zig-zag or stretch stitch. This will give you the lightest weight "stay" for your seam that is possible, and you won't lose any of the flexibility of the knit.

Girl Scouts Staging A Weekend Camp-Out

The girls set up camp, some with tents, yesterday afternoon and held opening ceremonies at 4 p.m. Today there were crafts and activity sessions set for morning and afternoon, including tye-dyeing, macrame, games, folk dancing, and guitar lessons and playing.

A song fest will follow and a camp fire will be held tonight. The Scouts will do their own cooking throughout the camp session, said Mrs. Raymond Mann of San Rafael, camp director.

Program coordinators are Linda Anderson of Novato and Mrs. Edward Fernandez of Lucas Valley. Other committee members include Mmes. Kenneth Brown, William Rose and Frank Klakowski, who is camp nurse.

Much of the planning has been done by the Girl Scouts themselves.

Connect Charge Hike Shelved By Directors

North Marin County Water Dsitrict directors have put aside a proposal to raise the connection charge for new homes as a means of bolstering reserve funds for long-range improvements.

Dist. Mgr. Eugene S. Churchill said a series of motions on the porposed increase, $300 to $425, failed Thursday night and no action was taken.

Director Patrick Heffernan proposed that revenue from a higher charge be used to reduce the tax rate and director George A. Amaroli suggested spreading the charge over a two-year period, Churchill reported.

Evelyn Johnson, a director of the North Marin Federation of Homeowners, spoke in favor of increasing the charge, he said.

Directors also received a report that the Sonoma County Water Agency is considering increasing its rate for Russian River $10 an acre foot.

The cost to the district, which has a contract with the agency, would be an additional $42,000 a year, Churchill said.

One $5 increase would be for repayment of the general obligation bonds for the Petaluma aqueduct, and the levy would be against Petaluma, North Marin County Water District, Cotati and Rohnert Park, Churchill said.

The second proposed $5 increase would be charged "to all users of Russian River water" and would be used to provide reserve funds for major projects, he said.

Directors expressed concern about the use of the reserve fund and Heffernan didn't want the money to be used to serve new developments, Churchill said.

The North Marin County Water District board also:

WATER USE — Received a report from Churchill that water consumption last month was up 29.5 per cent from March, 1971, 129 millions gallons as compared to 99.9 million.

GROSSI RANCH — Authorized rancher George Grossi, whose ranch is near Lake Stafford, permission to draw water directly from the lake until next April.

MEETING SCHEDULE — Scheduled meetings on May 9 and 23, instead of the regularly scheduled meetings next month, at 8 p.m. at the district office, 999 Atherton Avenue.

Marin Architects Figure In Prizes

Marin County architects figured in two of the nine projects that won 1972 nationwide honor awards from the American Institute of Architects, the institute announced today in Washington, D.C.

The Ice House I and II in San Francisco and the Weyerhauser headquarters building in Tacoma were among the award winners selected by a jury from more than 470 entries.

Architects for the Ice House building converted two vintage 1914, brick cold storage buildings into modern, wholesale furniture marts and connected them with a striking glass concourse. The work was designed by the firm of Wurster, Bernardi and Emmons, Inc. of San Francisco. Architects Theodore C. Bernardi and Donn Emmoms, both of Sausalito, are partners in the firm. Landscape architect for the modernization project was Lawrence Halprin Associates of Kentfield.

Skidmore, Owings and Merrill of San Francisco was the architectural firm for the massive Weyerhauser Corp. structure which stretches between two hills somewhat like the Marin County Civic Center. Partners in the architectural firm include Nathaniel Owings of Mill Valley and Douglas M. Merrill of Novato. Sasaki-Walker Associates of Sausalito was landscape architect.

Public Hearing Set On Novato Housing

The Novato Planning Commission will have a hearing on the proposed housing element for the Novato General Plan at 8 p.m. Monday at the Novato Community Huse.

Neighborhood committees have urged a housing element that would retain the semi-rural character of Novato and the city housing committee has stressed providing housing of all types that would serve persons of all ages and incomes.

Wildlife Study Is Announced

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — State water chief William R. Gianelli has announced a $1.4 million study program to investigate fish and wildlife problems on north coast rivers.

The combined federal-state project is specifically aimed at silt and sediment problems in the Trinity and Eel River areas, the effect of water releases on fisheries and the impact of dams.

In a statement, Gianelli, director of the Water Resources Department, said the U.S. Bureaus of Reclamation and Sport Fisheries and Wildlife will contribute $1 million to the project with state agencies picking up the rest of the cost.

In addition to Gianelli's department and the federal agencies, the Department ofish and Game will take part in the study.

Axion Players To Open 'Lovers' In Late May

The Axion Players — a student theater group in Marin — will present its second production, "Lovers," at 8:30 p.m. May 26 and 27 and June 2 and 3 at the Sir Francis Drake High School theater in San Anselmo.

The group also will stage the play at San Rafael High School June 9 and 10.

"Winners" is the story of two 17-year-old lovers, set on a hilltop in England, while "Losers" deals with a troubled 50-year-old suitor, set in Ireland.

"Winners" will be directed by Russ Blum of Sir Francis Drake High School. "Losers" will be directed by Kathy Rainey of College of Marin.

The cast is composed of students from Drake, San Rafael and Redwood high schools and the College of Marin.

Budget Session

The San Rafael Board of Education will discuss a 1972-73 preliminary budget at an adjourned meeting Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the schools administration building.

Honor Society Sets Initiation

Pi Delta Phi, the French honor society at Dominican College, will initiate five new members at a special program at 7 p.m. Tuesday in Fanjeaux Hall on the San Rafael campus.

The new members are Marie de Lorimier, Margery Hume, Patricia Langlais, Kathleen Lynch and Christine Nervo.

The program will feature a lecture in French on playwright Eugene Ionesco by Roland Husson, French cultural attache, and a mime performance under the direction of associate professor Annette Lust.

Policemen May Be Needed In Halls Of City Schools

By GUY HALVERSON
The Christian Science Monitor News Service

CHICAGO, ILL. — Policemen permanently assigned to public schools? The issue is coming to a head in scores of cities throughout the U.S., the result of increasing instances of vandalism and assault in the schools.

Here in Chicago, an inquest is under way into the fatal shooting of a black Vietnam veteran in a school hallway by a public school security officer. The officer, an off-duty armed Chicago policeman, alleges that the veteran first pulled a revolver from a hip pocket.

As seen by Chicago's massive black community where criticism of the incident has been intense, the issue is critical. The giant Chicago school system maintains a security force of some 490 off-duty (and armed) Chicago policemen, plus another 40 unarmed civilians. Moreover, the police department itself has 48 officers assigned to maintaining order in schmols when called.

That police and security forces are increasingly active in school systems, however, is no longer in question. In mid 1970 the International City Management Association sent questionnaires to some 2,000 cities and found that 91 per cent of the police departments had some type of special programs for schools. In 94 of the cities — including some of the nation's largest — police had continuous, fulltime patrolling at selected or all public schools.

The controversy over use of security forces, it is widely recognized, is usually linked to the matter of guidelines.

In far too many cases, critics grumble, there are no precise policy guidelines regarding use of force, special training for the officers, and in some instances — the matter of civilian vs. police control of the officers.

In Chicago, the special school security force is controlled by school administrators. But the highly regarded Tucson, Ariz., program uses fulltime policemen at selected junior high schools and one high school.

Related is the very question of purpose. Should the police presence be a short-range situation — occasionally patrolling a school, or as need arises — or more permanent, perhaps day-by-day patrol?

And when the security men are fulltime policemen, how much latitude should the police departments themselves have?

In Philadelphia, following a police-black student clash in 1967, Police Commissioner Frank L. Rizzo (who was elected mayor last year) insisted on the right to place police in schools at his discretion. The school board balked, however, and in 1968 a policy was agreed upon whereby police were put under control of the school principals.

Some critics argue that a permanent "police presence" tends to overexpose students to police control at an impressionable age — and thus underline a "police state mentality."

"The idea of police in the academic community is plainly repugnant," argues James Pray, associate director of the Southern chapter of the Arizona Civil Liberties Union. "In addition to leading to a police mentality with students, it puts a premium on infidelity to one's friends."

The Tucson police department's "school resource program," in which some 12 armed officers work with schools, is primarily a "preventive" program aimed at thwarting juvenile delinquency, and not really a "security" patrol, says Lt. Donald Lowe, commander of the Community Youth Crime Prevention Force.

Though the ACLU fought the program at its inception (unsuccessfully), the program lately has met "very little resistance," he says.

Defenders of the use of police security forces — such as Edward D. Brady, who heads up Chicago's large school security program and was a founder of the International Association of School Security Officers — argue that a comprehensive security program can reduce assaults.

Last year assaults against employees dropped 6.6 per cent in Chicago schools, while severe assaults (requiring hospitalization) plummeted 47 per cent — certainly a result of the security program, says Brad.

For its part, the association is pushing a so-called "safe school act" that would let schools use federal funds to finance their own security forces. Sponsored by Rep. Jonathan Bingham (Dem.) of New York and cosponsored by Rep. Shirley Chisholm (Dem.) of New York and Louise Day Hicks (Dem.) of Massachusetts, among others, the bill would preclude use of federal funds to bring firearms, weapons, or chemical agents into schools.

One program — considered a model by some authorities — is that of the Palatine high school system, northwest of Chicago. The district, which takes in some 8000 from two communities (Palatine and Schaumburg townships), just happens to fall within the jurisdiction of three police agencies.

The law departments — along with the school districts — hammered out guidelines in the late 1960's whereby fulltime policemen are paid by the school district, wear civilian attire, and serve as counselors more than security men. Though armed, the officers' main function is preventive — again, as with Tucson, to ward off delinquency problems.

"The program is designed to help the young people adjust to society. It's not hostile," says Dr. Bruce Altergott, associate superintendent for the Palatine system. "We believe it's helped to bring about an increased respect and cooperation between students and the police.

One factor clouding the inquest here into the shooting of the black veteran — who was allegedly in the school to seek help from a teacher on a college course assignment he had — is that the hearing officer selected to preside over the inquest is Martin S. Gerber, who presided over a local inquest into the 1969 shooting by police of two young Black Panther leaders. That earlier inquest verdict, which held the shooting to be justifiable homicide, was later severely criticized by a federal grand jury.

Gerber was not himself personally criticized by the grand jury.

Valdosta's Naming

VALDOSTA, Ga. (UPI)—The city of Valdosta is named after the plantation of former Georgia Gov. George M. Troupe, which was known in 1860 as "Val d'Aosta." The town was first created in 1859 in Lowndes County to meet the first railroad in the area, but had to be moved four miles when the railroad missed the city by that distance.

1972 Boats — All Sizes, All Prices

From $10 Dinks to $374,000 70-Foot Luxury Yachts

By JACK WOLISTON

If you are shopping around with the idea of buying a new boat and seem a little confused, it's understandable.

Right now on the American market there are 2,932 distinctly different stock models being offered by 323 builders — and the price range is tremendous.

For just $10 you can become a member of the pleasure boat fraternity with an inflatable dink three feet, six inches long. On the other hand, you can spend $374,000 and head out to sea in a luxurious 70-foot motor yacht.

BUT IN between these two extremes you should be able to find the boat of your choice in the 1972 lineup of inboard cruisers, sterndrive and outboard boats, auxiliary sailboats, one-design and daysailers, houseboats, rowboats, canoes, and inflatable and specialty boats of every description.

And if you want to build your own, there's a big selection of kits and plans available.

This survey of what's available on today's pleasure boat market was compiled by Boating magazine for its 1972 Director of Boats and Equipment, a handy publication which lists manufacturers, the basic specifications of their products, and their prices.

THE SURVEY shows that powerboatmen this year have 1,697 different inboard, sterndrive and outboard boats to choose from — 58 per cent of all stock boats on the market, excluding houseboats.

Of the total, 502 of the boats are inboards produced by 82 builders. They range from an eight-foot jet runabout to an 80-foot diesel cruiser.

In the sterndrive category, the survey showed there were 88 manufacturers offering 552 boats in lengths from 15 feet to 36 feet and costing from $2,650 to $45,000. There were 643 outboard models offered by 85 companies at prices ranging from $70 to $12,000.

The survey showed that sailors — be they racing or cruising buffs — have 587 different models to consider.

AUXILIARY-TYPE racing and cruising sailboats start with a 13½-foot catboat and go all the way up to an 82-foot ketch, with prices ranging from $1,595 to $175,000.

The survey showed that the range of houseboats and platform boats gets bigger each year. In 1972, there are 46 different brands of houseboats and platform boats ranging in size from 10 feet to 76 feet and in price from $350 to $190,000.

Among the rowboats, dinghies, canoes, inflatables and specialty boats, there are 465 models made by 91 companies. They start with that three-and-a-half-foot inflatable dinghy for $10 and go all the way up to a 43-foot workboat for $34,900.

And don't forget those boats you can build yourself from kits and plans. These are offered by 24 different companies. Plans for a tiny sailing craft cost just $6; a kit for a 56-foot fiberglass auxiliary cruiser hull goes for $9,900.

THE COVER

WHILE boating is a year-around sport in the San Francisco Bay Area, it does have its special busy season. And that season is launched annually with traditional, colorful festivities on the Bay. Tomorrow those opening of-the-season rites take place for 1972. And as is its custom, the Independent-Journal Marin Magazine again salutes the yachtsmen of Marin with its annual special boating edition, this one the biggest such boating issue in the publication's history. The artwork for the cover is by I-J staff artist Jack Lucey.

Texas Leads In Boating

Texas became the nation's best market for small pleasure boats, outboard motors and boat trailers in 1971, according to a research study by the Boating Industry Associations.

The Lone Star State maintained its four-year hold on the top spot in outboard boat sales, corralling 9.89 per cent of the national market. It held its five-year lead in boat trailer sales, accounting for 11.72 per cent of the market. And it displaced Florida as the nation's top outboard motor market, claiming 8.90 per cent of sales nationally.

Florida was runner-up in all three categories: 7.12 per cent of boat sales, 7.99 per cent of trailer sales and 8.03 per cent of motor sales.

Other leaders:

Outboard boats: Minnesota: Minnesota, 6.60 per cent; Wisconsin, 5.78 per cent; Michigan, 5.48 per cent; New York, 5.27 per cent; Louisiana, 4.41 per cent; California, 3.96 per cent; Ohio, 3.50 per cent; and South Carolina, 3.18 per cent.

Boat trailers: Louisiana, 5.87 per cent; Wisconsin, 4.71 per cent; New York, 4.20 per cent; Michigan and California, each 4.02 per cent; Minnesota, 3.84 per cent; Ohio, 3.39 per cent; and South Carolina, 3.39 per cent.

Outboard motors: New York, 6.07 per cent; Minnesota, 5.24 per cent; Wisconsin, 5.06 per cent; Michigan, 4.86 per cent; Louisiana, 4.70 per cent; California, 4.65 per cent; Illinois, 3.55 per cent; and Ohio, 3.41 per cent.

Another Boating Season To Open

Bay Festivities Set Tomorrow

By RON LENT

Marin County boating enthusiasts searching for seafaring pleasures can enjoy the yacht season opening festivities on San Francisco Bay tomorrow.

A highlight of this annual spectacular will be the Corinthian Yacht Club of Tiburon-sponsored blessing of the fleet. Some 2,000 pleasure boats ranging from sailboats to motorboats will be deckedout in royal and, conceivably, in gaudy splendor befitting the day's pageantry.

CEREMONIES begin at 7:30 in the Corinthian Yacht Club with a breakfast, pledge to the Flag and a pray for war dead.

At this time, four Navy leaders will be honored. They are: Rear Adm. C. J. Van Arsdall Jr., Rear Adm. W. S. Guest, Rear Adm. Henry J. Johnson and Rear Adm. Mark Whalan. Belvedere and Tiburon political dignitaries including Rep. William S. Mailliard, representing parts of Marin County and San Francisco, will also attend.

After breakfast, guests will board the United States Navy destroyer D. D. Perkins to hear the United States Navy Band and partake in the blessing ceremonies, officiated over by religious leaders Rabbi M. Arthur Oles of San Francisco's Mt. Zion Hospital; Capt. George Wright, Treasure Island chaplain; and Fr. George Johnson of St. Hilary's Catholic Church in Tiburon.

THE ON-SHIP rites, set for approximately 9 a.m., will feature the passage of the expected 2,000 pleasure ships. As the vessels pass by the destroyer, the three religious leaders will deliver the blessings. Meanwhile, a San Francisco fireboat will deliver a baptism-like spray in augmenting the religious leaders' words for "The Blessings of the Plesaure Crafts" on the Raccoon Straits between Angel Island and the Corinthian Yacht Club.

"This blessing," explained Capt. Elmer Towle, originator of the event, "in essence, wishes good will and safety on the waters for both the boats and the captains.

"And, if the captians so desire, they can receive a scroll of blessing signed by each of the three men of the cloth."

Once receiving the blessings, the ships proceed to the parade-on-the-bay starting positions beneath the Golden Gate Bridge. The 10 a.m. parade, scheduled to inaugurate the new yachting season, will move past the San Francisco Marina to the Farry Building and break up at Pier 45.

"Before the activities conclude a myriad of colorfully decorated ships will have passed by boating fans. Most of the ships will have decorations with balloons and fancy-colored flags. Some ships will have themes or ideas to project, like an Irish four-leaf clover," Towle pointed out. "Certainly, there will be something there to please everyone."

If colors and themes fail to impress viewers, possibly the vigorous Marin County Club participation in the program will.

AMONG THE 64 yacht clubs participating, are the Corinthian Yacht Club, San Francisco Yacht Club of Belvedere, Sausalito Yacht Club, Sausalito Cruising Club, Paradise Cay Yacht Club, Strawberry Cove Yacht Club, Marin Yacht Club, San Rafael Yacht Club, Bel Marin Keys Yacht Club, Loch Lomond Yacht Club and Gallinas Yacht Club.

Additionally, the Coast Guard will be on hand to assure greater safety in the extremely-crowded bay.

Boat Builders See Record '72

Industry's Signs Point To A Prosperous Season

A prosperous new season is anticipated by the recreational boating industry as 1972 begins with all economic indicators pointing the way out of recession and into a year which many industry figures foresee as the best in boating's history.

Sales of boats, engines, equipment and marine services during the 1970-71 model year were significantly higher than figures for 1969-70, and the upward trend is certain to continue as consumer dollars, hoarded during the recession and loosened by the federal wage-price freeze, are spent on recreation in general and boating in particular this spring and summer.

Boat dealers placed larger than usual orders earlier than usual last fall in anticipation of spring's customers, and the industry is showing confidence in a year certain to be good, and just liable to be the best ever.

A survey of leading fiberglas boatbuilders by the Reinforced Plastics-Composites Institute reveals that heavy investments in new and improved plants and facilities have been made in anticipation of a 1971-72 model year which is hoped will show increases of 10 per cent to 12 per cent in sales. More than half of the builders surveyed expected 1972 sales increases of more than 25 per cent, a few were preparing for 50 per cent higher sales.

The industry's 1971 increase began in February when dollar volume figures were up 22 per cent over the previous February. In June, the increase was a heartening 47 per cent. During August, the final month of the model year, outboard motor shipments were 74.3 per cent higher in units and 71.8 per cent higher in dollar value than comparable figures for the previous August.

During the past model year — September, 1970, to the end of August, 1971 — the dollar value of boating goods sold rose 11.8 per cent over the dollar-value total for the previous year. Boats were up 2.4 per cent in units shipped and 2.7 per cent in dollar value, outboard motors were up a substantial 21.4 per cent in units shipped and 33.3 per cent in dollar value. There were 495,000 outboard motors sold in 1971, compared with 430,000 the previous year. Industry sources estimate that $3,610,000,000 was spent at the retail level during 1971 for boats, engines, marine equipment, used boats, fuel and such services as dockage and club fees, storage and repairs. The previous year's retail-spending total was $3,440,000,000.

The average horsepower of outboard motors sold in 1971 was 35.6, up from 31.0 in 1970. Over 40 per cent of the motors were 45 horsepower or more, an increase of 10 percentage points over last year.

The average length of outboard boats purchased in the year was 15.6 feet. Stern drive boat sales tallied in 1971 were estimated at 44,000.

The three top outboard motor sales/markets in 1971 were the same as in 1970, proving that the big get bigger, at least in boating. Texas hung on to the number one sales spot, adding to its great legends of bigness. Believe it or not, an estimated 39,700 motors were sold within its boundaries. Florida, often promoted as the boating capital of the world, was a close second with sales of 39,500, while number three was New York responsible for 30,000 motor sales. Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, Louisiana and California delivered sales to the industry ranging from 23,000 to over 25,000 each.

But New York remained in the market with more boating customers, if usage of outboard motors is a gauge. About 593,000 of them, more than in any other state, were operating in 1971, and that could mean there were more purchasers of gasoline, boating supplies and equipment than elsewhere. Texas, Florida and California trailed the Empire State by about 150,000 each.

Marine dealers increased their average gross income by about 5 per cent in 1970, according to the trade publication Boating Industry. The average dealer gross was $275,000 during 1970, compared with $262,000 during 1969. The one-year lag in figures is the time it takes to collect retail reports.

Dealers profited not only from the industry's upswing but from sales generated by newspaper advertising and local promotional programs. The annual survey by the National Association of Engine and Boat Manufacturers shows that the nation's newspaprs featured more pages devoted to boating advertising and editorial coverage during the first half of 1971 than in any comparable period in the past. The 136 newspapers surveyed — representing 109 cities in 36 states — published 164 special boating sections during 1971, a 16.3 per cent increase in the number of such sections published the previous year.

Boat shows were the most common of the special-section themes, accounting for 61 per cent of the 164 boating sections and publicizing most of the nation's annual boat shows. The 135 newspapers published a total of 2,495 pages of boating news and advertising during 1971 for an average of 18.4 pages per paper.

31' CATALINA

Unless you see it for yourself, it's hard to believe.

Inside this all-fiberglass Catalina is as much cabin space as you'd find in many larger houseboats. The unique bow configuration, provides 23% more living space than you would ordinarily have in 31 feet. Best of all, note how well Chris-Craft has put the space to use. You get house boat accommodation wrapped up in a blue water hull.

There are convertible lounges oppsoite each other in the main cabin, twin berths in the private forward stateroom to make the total sleeping capacity for six. A berth forward converts into a sitting lounge, and thanks to the extra-wide stateroom door, eleven people can be seated comfortably in conversation.

At the aft end of the cabin are a fully equipped galley and a lavatory with stall shower optional.

A smart fiberglass hardtop is optional over the wide cockpit, and a helmsman seat and footrest are standard.

The exciting new model offers twin screw options of 235-hp Chris-Craft V-8 engines or 145-hp diesels.

Place all this on top of a gigantic six-sleeper interior w/lower station controls, the privacy of an enclosed forward stateroom, the luxury of rich natural philippine mahogany, the brightness and livability and extra headroom of a sedan deckhouse.

Then just aft, put a 9' x 9' cockpit.

This model is loaded in every area with the features that families, fishing enthusiasts and their companions want most . . .

Gas Turbines Arrive For Big Boats

That's Major 1972 News For Larger Power Craft

FOR THE FIRST TIME, in 1972, the 48-foot Pacemaker Sportsfisherman is being offered with gas turbine power. With twin 3600 Ford engines rated at 350 horsepower at 3,000 revolutions per minute, the luxury craft sells for $98,000.

THIS IS THE NEW Hatteras 42 Convertible available with twin 300 horsepower gasoline engines, twin GM 6-71 diesels or twin Cummins 903 diesels. The luxury fingerglass sports yacht has berths for six people in her length of 42 feet eight inches and beam of 13 feet 10 inches. She is priced at about $105,000, including a long list of equipment.

There were plenty of big new power craft for 1972, but the big news in the big-boat category is the debut of the first gas turbine engines ever offered for sale in production models.

Pacemaker and Chris-Craft have taken the first steps in introducing the economical, powerful turbines to the pleasure boat market.

Two of the gas turbines, each developing 450 horsepower, are offered in Pacemaker's 48-foot Sportsfisherman. Each weighs less than half as much, and requires a third less space, than a comparable diesel, yet they can be run all day flat out. That's why the specs say the top speed of 26.8 miles per hour is also the cruising speed.

Both Pacemaker and the Ford Motor Co., which built the turbines, say they will, in time, revolutionize the marine propulsion field for big power boats. Price of the turbine-equipped Sportsfisherman is $98,000. The turbines are production models in Ford's 3600 series.

CHRIS-CRAFT is offering the Ford turbine in its 55-foot Commander yacht, but the engine is in the 4200 series that produces 500 shaft hp. The boat sleeps ten in luxury, and her price is around $167,000.

Other newsmakers in the big boat fleet are a new 38-foot Sedan Cruiser from Egg Harbor, only the second model to bear that name to be built in fiberglass; a new 41-foot double cabin flying bridge cruiser from Concorde, and a new 38-foot Sportfisherman from Bertram.

As for trends, quite a few builders are taking a given hull design and offering it in a choice of models such as a sportsfisherman, a sedan or express cruiser, a hardtop day cruiser or just a comfortable family boat.

WINNER BOATS, which this year is celebrating its 25th year since building the first fiberglass production boat, offers its new 24-foot fiberglass cruiser almost anyway you want it; as a Family Fishing Bridge model, an Overnight Hardtop or a Sportsman Convertible. Winner also is introducing a new 28-foot Family Express Six Sleeper, a companion boat to the flybridge model first introduced last year.

An interesting option on the new boat is an all-fiberglass keel and skeg for shoal-water protection with a 225-horsepower Chrysler inboard. The Family Express sells for $19,914.

Egg Harbor's new glass boat is a powerful big-game hunter with twin 330-horsepower engines as standard power. She sleeps six, has a complete galley, enclosed head, teak cockpit and stern decks. She sells for $41,000.

PACEMAKER, parent firm to Egg Harbor, also has a new Sportsfisherman, a 26-footer which is available as an Express Cruiser. Both models have a 220-horsepower V-8 Crusader as standard power, giving them a top speed of 28 miles per hour.

Concorde's new boat is said to be one of the most spacious cruising yachts in its hull size on the market. The boat has been built to eliminate all interior bulkheads, with the living, cooking, dining and sleeping areas comprising a big open salon with over 150 square feet of unobstructed space. Add to this another 55 square feet on the flying bridge, and 140 square feet of aft deck area, and you have a total of just under 350 square feet of living area — about as much, says Concorde, as a modest-sized town house.

With a pair of T325 Mer-Cruiser inboards as standard power, the new 41 sells for $62,500.

Bertram Yacht's new 38 foot Sportsfisherman is called Tournament Moppie, and as the name suggests, she's designed to get out to where the big ones lurk and bring them home.

A CLASSIC Bertram deep-vee hull design, Tournament Moppie has a top speed of 34 miles per hour, with power provided by a pair of 325-horsepower Mer-Cruisers. She sleeps four to six, and features no fewer than three steering stations; one on the flying bridge, one inside the main cabin, and a third in the roomy cockpit. With standard power, she sells for $52,390, and with a pair of 283-horsepower GM8V-53 diesels, the price tag reads $69,890.

Bertram, long known for fast, sleek medium-size cruisers and fishermen, has come out with a Convertible-Sport Fisherman or Motor Yacht 46-footer that will be ogled by big-boat buffs around the world.

The fishing convertible powered with two GM diesels, is the result of two years research and design work, offering interior accommodations on three levels.

THE COCKPIT is separated from the main cabin by a few steps and sliding glass doors. The cabin is truly plush and spacious, with bar, complete entertainment center, sofa and drop-leaf table. A few steps down and forward is a fishermen's galley with separate freezer and refrigerator, three-burner stove and all the accouterments one would expect. A few more steps down and forward is the main living area, with owner's stateroom to port and guest cabin forward. Both have full heads.

Four of Chris-Craft's big-boat models are new or redesigned for 1972. Biggest is a 41-foot Commander, a tri-cabin model with a walkaround flush deck that's said to be the forerunner of a new and wider family of Commanders. With a pair of 300-horsepower engines, she sells for $65,450.

In the Catalina line, Chris-Craft is showing a pair of 28-footers. One is a new Coho Sedan cruiser with standard command bridge, berths for six, twin 200-horsepower engines and a price tag of $16,900.

THE OTHER 28-footer will be a surprise to boatmen accustomed to the Chris-Craft tradition of luxury. The Catalina Sportsman is sold virtually stripped, with only a hardtop and a 235-horsepower engine as standard equipment, for a rock-bottom price of $9,900. From then on, the options include twin-engine power, galley equipment, dinette, V-berth pads and command bridge.

In sharp contrast, the new Hatteras 42 Convertible is a luxurious sedan cruiser with three different cabin areas, full interior carpeting, optional air conditioning with reverse-cycle heating, and upper and lower berths in the master stateroom. The new boat continues the Hatteras appearance of the past few years with a wide bow flare, clean sweep aft of sheer line and enlarged flying bridge.

There's six feet four inches of headroom throughout most of her interior and her galley is worthy of a Cordon Bleu cook. The new model is 42 feet eight inches overall, carries 150 gallons of fresh water and 400 gallons of fuel. With the proper twin GM or Cummins diesels, she can be had for about $104,000. Twin 300 horsepower gasoline engines are optional.

VIRTUALLY ALL production cruisers are made of fiberglass. The state of the art in manufacturing these luxurious craft has progressed to the point where Chris-Craft, for example, makes its new Commander 41 in a single-cavity mold, instead of joining together sections from two molds.

Ease of maintenance dominates below-decks decor, with vinyl and wood laminates in great profusion. There are the luxury options such as air conditioning, stereo systems, built-in vacuum systems and electric refrigeration, plus such practical options as holding tanks for heads for boats subject to strict waste discharge controls.

A New Use For The Bike Lock

How to prevent the theft of your outboard motor?

Using a bicycle lock may come as a surprise to you. But, as National Automobile Club points out, that bicycle lock makes a handy safeguard.

First tighten the motor down on the transom. Then insert the bicycle lock through the small holes in the turnscrew handles.

Now your motor locks in place. And no thief can loosen the handles.

How To Go About Selecting A Seaworthy Used Boat

If he doesn't like the sport, his financial loss isn't too great. If he does like it, he's apt to trade up to a new model before too long.

The best way for the used boat buyer to avoid disenchantment with the sport is to choose a good rig the first time, advises the Boating Industry Assn.

Determining the true condition of a used boat usually is a job for professionals. If you are planning to lay out big money for a large cruiser, you should have a marine surveyor check it out for you. He will charge a fairly stiff fee — but it's usually worth it in the long run, BIA points out.

IF YOU HAPE your eye on a more modest craft, your only recourse is to depend on the integrity of the seller — and your own ability to spot possible flaws.

A tip-off on how the boat has been maintained and serviced is the general condition of the building or boatyard in which it is stored. If it is neat, clean and well-organized, chances are the boat has received similar treatment.

Before checking details, tand off a few feet and study the overall appearance of the hull. Are thare any bad spots which indicate excessive wear? Are there any signs of leakage? Are there any indications that repair work has been done — and, if so, was the repair work done properly? Is the paint in good condition? Are there any signs of rust, corrosion or damage from polluted water or aquatic plant life?

GO AHEAD, thump it! (You probably will anyway.) As you do, be on the lookout for excessive softness (if it's a wood hull), or for a "thin skin" (if it's fiberglass or metal).

Better still, bring a small hammer with you to do your thumping. It will save wear and tear on your knuckles and tell you more about the condition of the hull.

Peeled, cracked or discolored paint or varnish on a wood hull is a tip-off that water has seeped between the finish and the wood. While this is not necessarily serious, be sure by checking for damaged planking or dry rot.

Poke the suspected area with the tip of a small pen knife. If it punctures easily, somewhat like cardboard, it's dry rot. This means you will probably face extensive repair work.

AFTER YOU'RE convinced that the basic hull is sound, it's time to turn your attention to the power unit. If it's an outboard, check to see if it's under or over-powered. Most manufacturers affix a plate to the hull indicating the boat's maximum safe horsepower capacity.

If it's an inboard, look closely at the propeller, shaft and shaft bearing or stuffing box. Propeller blades frequently are nicked or bent and serious harm can be done to the shaft and engine if the boat has been operated any length of time with a damaged prop. Also check the shaft for signs of wear or excessive slack.

Now, walk around the boat and inspect the accessories — lights, steering and fuel systems, flotation, etc. Statistics indicate that this is the area where you can expect trouble to develop first. Industry-wide standards for most of these components have been established by BIA, and there are federal and state regulations regarding such items as lights, fuelsystems and ventilation.

IF YOU'RE NOT a naval architect or marine surveyor, the best way to insure that the boat complies with these standards and regulations is to look for the BIA certification plate. This plate certifies that it has been inspected by an independent testing laboratory and found to be in compliance with industry practices and applicable regulations when il left the factory.

Finally, look closely inside the hull and cabin for possible rot. This usually shows up on the underside of decks, outboard ends of beams, frames, thwarts, the flooring and at the lower end of the bulkheading. If it is fiberglass, check the same areas for delamination (separation) or fractures in the surface.

Many so-called "good deals" in used boats turn sour. However, if you follow the routine recommended by BIA, you will have reasonable assurance that the boat you buy is basically seaworthy.

The Sports Craft Are The Glamor Boats Of This Year

Sports boats are the glamor boats this year with emphasis on versatility and speed.

It's the rare manufacturer of power craft in the 15 to 25-foot range who isn't building a racy model with initials like GT, SS or X in front of its name to highlight his line of runabouts, utility boats, campers and ski boats.

Of the 11 Chris-Craft boats shown in New York's 1972 Boat Show, no fewer than seven were products of the company's Sport Boat Division, including the jet-powered 18-footer, which will take up to a 400-horsepower mill coupled to an underwater jet pump.

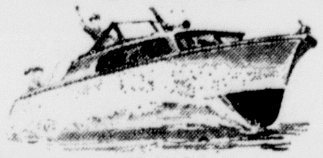
Winner's entry in the high-performance field is the GTX-SS, a 16-foot six-inch "bomb" which will take outboards up to 85 horsepower. She has custom swivel bucket seats, a wraparound contour rear seat and "spoiler" rear deck design. She sells for $1,799.

WHEN YOU see Larson Boats new Shark 1800 with her optional air foil, you'll see fancy sport-boat design. A rugged bowrider, she comes with recliner-swivel bucket seats, wraparound stern seat and either outboard or stern drive power.

Other trends observable in the 1972 inboard-outboard fleet are an almost universal use of fiberglass, swiveling bucket seats for the helmsman and companion, padded rear decks for sunbathing or lounging, padded cockpit seats with contoured arm rests and fully carpeted cockpit floors.

Cuddy cabins are making something of a comeback, and when you get up around 18 to 20 feet, you'll find there is a choice of either outboard or stern drive power in the same boat.

BOWRIDERS seem to have captured the runabout fild, but Glastron's new V-215 Vagabond Camper is a bowrider with a difference. She has a roomy cuddy cabin behind her bow compartment with full-length berths for two and hide-away head and toilet. The cockpit has fold-down sunlounger seats, and there's a handy swimming ladder which folds down from its recess in the transom.



Stern-drive power options include either a Glastron 170 or 210, or a Mer-Cruiser 165.

Glastron also is building a new sport boat, the CV-16 SS, in metalflake gold or red hull colors, with wraparound windshield, padded dash, glove box, woodgrain steering wheel, and wraparound bucket seats for four. Powered by a Glastron 130-horsepower sterm drive unit, she sells for $4,099.

LYMAN BOATS, which has been building wooden craft at its Sandusky, Ohio plant, since 1875, is introducing two new fiberglass models for 1972, both with traditional Lyman lapstrake hull design. The Sebring 19 runabout has reached 42 miles per hour with a 155-horsepower V-6 engine, and the Biscayne 24 has hit 35 miles per hour with a 200-horsepower inboard.

The 183 Adventurer from National Boat Works has a traditional V-shaped bow, but she's a bowrider just the same. At 18-feet, four-inches on the centerline, she'll be representative of a new and bigger line of these comfortable watercraft.

CHRIS-CRAFT says it is responding to customer demand by bringing back its classic inboard runabout. It's called the Lancer Inboard, 23 feet long, with a hull recess that reduces draft some nine inches. Powered by a 235-horsepower direct drive unit, the new Lancer Inboard sells for $7,975.

The AristoCraft 19 is the only boat built by the Atlanta Boat Works, and it's a versatile craft which comes as a hardtop day cruiser or a big open fishing boat. In either configuration, she's distinguished by a flared rear transom which provides a six-foot-wide sun deck across the stern.

Within her deep-vee hull, the AristoCraft 19 has 30 cubic feet of foam flotation, making her virtually unsinkable. Standard equipment includes a built-in, inuulated ice chest, recessed ski or fish stowage beneath the cockpit floor, carpeting, bow and stern rails and seats for six.

WITH A 120-horsepower MerCruiser or OMC tern drive as standard power, she sells for $4,165.

Why Port, Starboard?

One source gives this explanation:

"It was a custom among the Vikings 1,000 years ago to tie up to docks and quays with the left sides of their ships shoreward. That's how the left side of a ship came to be called the 'uport' side. And because of this custom, the rather fragile steering rudders of their double-ended ships were rigged on the right side, so they would not be in danger of brushing against a quay and suffering damage. Thus, the modern term for the right side of the boar, 'starboard,' comes from the Viking word for 'steering board.' "

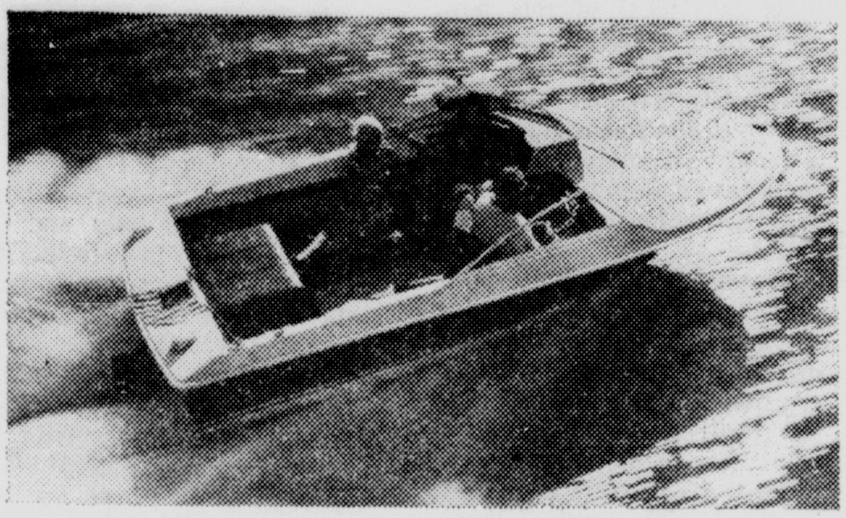
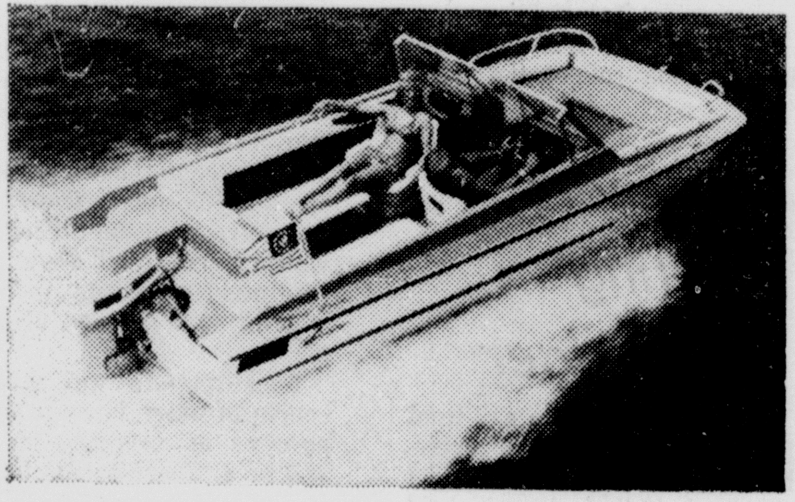
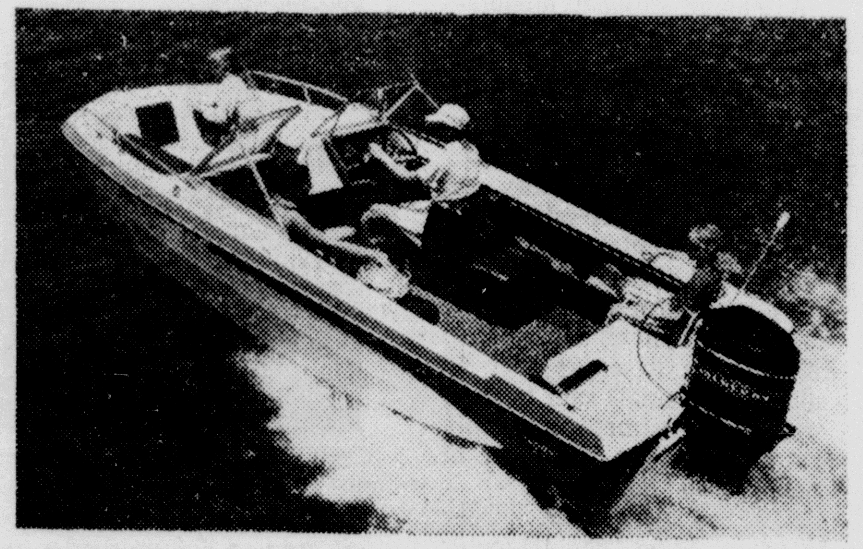
Thunderbird Products, the runabout and sports partner of Pacemaker has four new fiberglass runabouts: the Comanche 187, a cathedral-hull design with forward cuddy cabin and berths for two, and the Apache 187 bowrider. Under the Formula name, Thunderbird has at least two new sport boats to offer: the Formula 190 and the Formula 177, both with engine gptions that begin with a 165-horsepower MerCruiser and go to a 245-horsepower OMC.



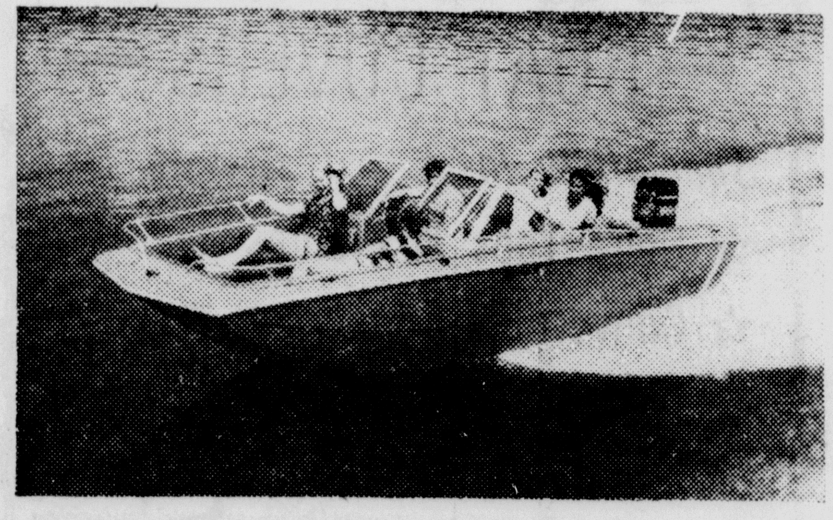
CRESTLINER OF Little Falls, Minn., has introduced the Crusader 17 for 1972, with 120 horsepower MerCruiser stern drive. The fiberglass boat sells for $1,995.



THE FORWARD passenger seat on this 16-foot, four-inch Shark 165 swivels for easy sunbathing, while the split windshield provides easy access to the forward cockpit. The new boat is being built by Larson Boats of Little Falls, Minn., for outboards up to 140 horsepower, and retails for $1,950.



AN IMPROVED 1972 version of the V-176 Swinger from the Glastron Boat Co. of Austin, Tex., features a transom that can take up to 150 horsepower. The 17-foot, eight-inch bowrider costs $1,849.



A DEEP V BOWRIDER for 1972 with cathedral hull is the fiberglass Pompano CX-191 built by Caravelle Boat Co. of Jacksonville, Fla. The 19-footer is 90 inches wide, can take up to 185 horsepower and sells for $2,429.

At the top of the medium-sized field are boats such as the new Commodore 25-foot cruiser from Cruisers, Inc. She's a full-cabin model with berths for four, stand-up enclosed head with optional holding system, complete galley with optional refrigerator and heavy-duty vinyl top with boot. She's also available with an optional Camper top and stern cross-bunk seating assembly for extended cruising. Power options begin with a 165-horsepower MerCruise and a price tag of $10,495.

MFG BOATS is another firm to offer a cruiser which can double as a camper. The Gypsy 21 E-Z Cruiser has berths for two and a modified flying bridge with an interesting option: either a companion seat to the helmsman' seat, or a plug-in self-contained unit which includes sink, icebox and cutting board.

All three of Crestliner's 1972 fiberglass runabouts were co-designed by Jim Wynne, the ocean racer, and Fred Hudson, a well-known marine engineer. The Crusader 19 is a cuddy-cabin model with two berths, deep-vee hull and either outboard or stern drive power. The Crusader 17 bowrider seats at least eight, and the Muskie 18 bowrider also is surprisingly roomy.

SEA RAY BOATS has four different versions of its SRV 240 model for 1972: the Weekender, with galley, head and bunks for two; the 240CC, a cuddy-cabin model with two bunks and a rear cockpit seat which converts into a double berth; the 240 HT, a sporty hardtop, and the 240 FB, a flybridge version. Power options for all models begin with 165-horsepower MerCruiser stern drive and go up to 245-horsepower OMC's. The price range is $7,845 to $10,395.

Still another builder offering variations on a single theme is IMP Boats, which is building a flybridge version and an open cockpit version of its Inca day cruiser. The bridge model has a four-seater lounge which converts into upper and lower berths, complete with bunk ladder, and an optional recirculating head.

And yes, there's a sport boat model, too, the X-246, with racing-strength gas tank, cuddy cabin with bunks, recirculating head, matched helm and companion seats, hideaway folding top and a full stern seat. With twin 165-horsepower MerCruiser stern drives, she sells for $13,175.

TO MARK its Golden Jubilee year in boatbuilding, Penn Yan Boats is introducing a new Montego series of open-cockpit runabouts, all with the company's exclusive tunnel-drive propulsion system. The new Montego 220 has a dark-brown lapstrake hull, rakish bow, high-backed bucket pedestal seats and an upholstered gunwhale pad. With a 96-inch beam, she can handle two berths with optional holding tank.

With Tunnel-Drive power of 210-horsepower, the new boat sells for $7,370.

Finally, for fishermen who prize comfort, Ouachita Marine has some elegant new Convincer models. The Model U is 16 feet long, has a complete steering system with either wheel or stick steering, two rocking and swiveling bucket seats, turf carpeting, rod holders and built-in flotation. She'll take outboards up to 95-horsepower, and sells for $1,328.94.

The Model K Convincer is 14 feet, four inches LOA, with options that include an anchor winch system and an electric bow trolling motor. List price, including two rocking swivel seats, is $860.14.

New Big Sailboats Are For Cruising

This could be the year that the manufacturers of big sailboats come to grips with reality.

The reality is that about 90 per cent of the people who prefer sail to power prefer cruising to racing. A look at some of the bigger auxiliary sailboats discloses that their builders have abandoned the fiction that a comfortable cruising boat also can be a competitive ocean racer.

At least four new sailboats, from three different builders, are cruisers all the way. All three have opted for double-cabin designs, with midships cockpits and private staterooms aft. There's a further similarity in such features as shoal draft, for easy gunkholing, and diesel power for long range, low cost and dependability.

ALLIED'S NEW 39-foot Mistress is typical of this new, clear-eyed trend. Displacing just over 20,000 pounds, she draws only four and a half feet of water. She sleeps six, two in a roomy aft cabin which also includes a hanging locker, dresser and head with optional shower.

Beneath the cockpit floor, there's a passageway allowing dry access to the forward cabin despite the weather. Dedicated cruising sailors will appreciate the built-in workbench and chart desk in the passageway.

On deck, Mistress is ruggedly-rigged, with oversized standing rigging, husky aluminum spars and no fewer than five winches as standard equipment. She spreads 700 square feet of sails, is $37,895.

TED IRWIN has two new boats which reflect the trend toward pure cruising. Both the Irwin 37 and the Irwin 32½ are double-cabin models. Each is available as a sloop or a ketch, and each draws an inch less than four feet.

In the Irwin 37, the aft cabin has two single berths flanking a built-in sofa, a head with shower and a hanging locker. In the Irwin 32½, there's no head in the aft cabin, but there is a double berth to starboard and an upholstered sofa and bureaus to port. In both models, there's a passageway beneath the cockpit floor connecting fore and aft cabins.

The bigger of the two new Irwins, with a 40 horsepower Westerbeke diesel, sells for $29,000 as a sloop and $31,845 as a ketch. Both prices are less sails. List price of the Irwin 32½, as a sloop, is $18,900.

THEN THERE'S the Pearson 390, designed by Bill Shaw, another double-cabin sloop with unusual straight-line, raised-deck design. The 13-foot beam on the Pearson 390 is carried far aft, giving the aft cabin an unusual amount of room.

A keel-centerboarder, the 390 spreads 663 square feet of sail. Standard equipment includes winches, bow and stern rails, lifelines and gates, pedestal steering and hot and cold water.

Trend-spotters will make a couple of other interesting discoveries in surveying the 1972 sail fleet. There seems to be a

Beginners Starting Out Bigger

Persons learning to sail used to start out with a small centerboarder in the 12-to-16 foot range, but that doesn't hold true today.

A good many beginners still learn the fundamentals in the smaller boats but more and more are starting in larger craft.

A leading sailboat manufacturer lists two reasons for this change:

Cruising sailboats cost less than they used to and more people have had the opportunity to experience the stability and comforts of a larger sailboat.

As this manufacturer points out — today the first sailboat is not just to learn on because the skill comes quickly; there is so much more to enjoy that by adding a a small sum to their original investment a family can actually get more out of their "second home."

CHRYSLER'S 15-foot daysailer, the Mutineer, introduced in 1972, has a 145-square-foot sail area, a kick-up rudder and twin self-bailers. The Mutineer retails for about $1,585.

move toward putting at least two and sometimes four berths in sailboats as small as 20 feet; and sailboats which can be trailered or used as campers, either ashore or afloat, are becoming more common.

THE NEW O'Day 22 is just 21-feet eight inches long, yet she has berths for four inside her hull. A fin-keel model, she draws under two feet of water, carries 200 square feet of sail, and sells for $2,795.

Douglass & McLeod has a new 22-footer, the D&M 22, for 1972. While designed specifically for racing to the IOR quarter-ton rule, she can be cruised in comfort, with berths for four and an enclosed head below. She sells for $6,000.

Fiberglass is the almost unanimous choice of sailboat builders showing medium sized to big sailboats in the market. There's a continued trend toward modern underwater shapes, with spade rudders and short keels. Increasingly, such former options as winches, roller reefing and vents are becoming standard equipment, along with showers or shower options, full genoa gear and a lavish use of teak for deck trim and cabin joinerwork.

SMALL SAILBOATS provide their share of what's new for 1972. As is the case with their larger sisters, the daysailers and smaller fun boats mostly are made of fiberglass or some form of plastic composition.

A surprising number of the little craft are unsinkable, a trend begun several years ago and continuing stronger. Their popularity also continues unabated, because of their versatility, modest cost, ease of transport, and the many hours of genuine delight they provide for young and old in sheltered waters.

Some examples of new small daysailers come from Cape Cod Shipbuilding, AMF Alcort and Chrysler Corp., for 1972.

THE NEW Cape Cod Cat, designed by Charles Wittholz, a well-known naval architect, offers either the traditional gaff or a Marconi masthead rig, with a further option of a fixed keel or a centerboard. She is 17 feet long, five inches shorter on the waterline, and with her seven-foot 11-inch beam retains the width associated with a cat.

More Horses

The average outboard motor purchased in 1971 was 35.6 horsepower, according to a survey conducted by the Boating Industry Associations. That's an increase of 5.6 horsepower from 1970. Boat size increased to 15.6 feet.

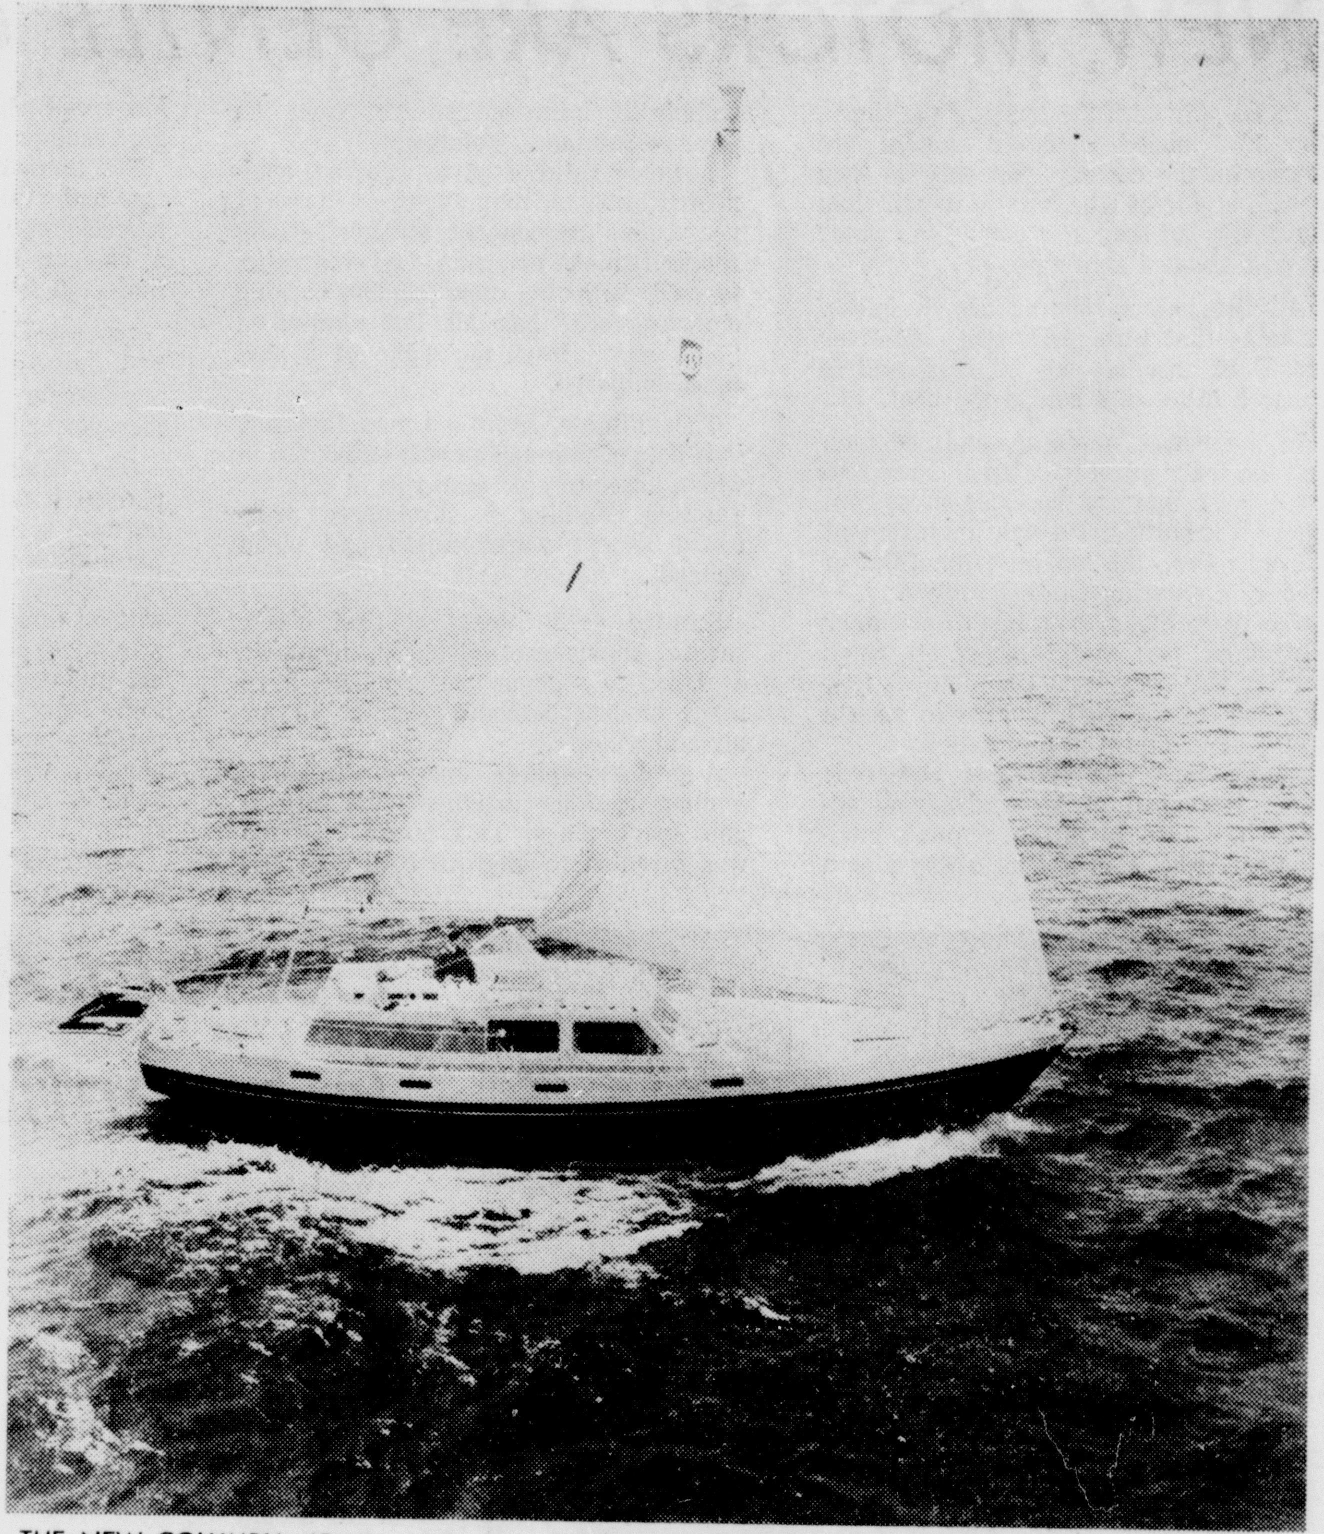
Centerboard version draft is 20 inches and the keel model draws 23 inches.

The Cape Cod Cat also is a roomy cruiser for two, boasting berths, lockers, shelves, sink and room for a head. Her base price less sails is $4,700. Inboard or outboard power may be added.

If the Cat is somewhat typical of the heavy end of the new daysailers, the AMF Alcort Hilu could be on the lighter end. She is an outrigger with a 14-foot main hull and a 10-foot float that can be mounted port or starboard. She hangs 65 square feet of sail, weighs 75 pounds and provides fun for two. Both hulls have foam flotation material, and there's a kick-up rudder for easy beaching. Her low price is $445 with sails.

Chrysler's daysailer is called Mutineer, and the builder believes she is an ideal trainer for the young sailor. A self-bailer, the 15-footer has room for four in addition to providing stowage space fore and aft. Her sail area is 145 square feet in main and jib. The latter has self-furling gear and see-through window.

She is tagged at $1,585.



THE NEW COLUMBIA 45 Motorsailor beats to the windward on San Francisco Bay. With a Perkins 4-107 diesel, she has a 1,200-mile cruising range. And spaciousness is the key to the craft with a skipper's cabin that alone measures 13 feet fore and aft. The first of the new 45-foot Motorsailors to be seen on the Bay is berthed at Clipper Yacht Harbor in Sausalito and is being offered by Sailboats/Sausalito for charter use.

NEW MOTORS ARE GENTLE ON THE ECOLOGY

In keeping with the tenor of the times, the 1972 model outboard motors are gentle on the ecology. Not only do they create less light blue haze in the air than formerly, but they now pollute the water at just about a zero rate.

All the new outboards are drainless. Gone is that little drip, drip, (however small) of gasoline and oil that used to cause a little slick behind the boat.

In the newest motors, unburned fuel, and the trace of oil it carries, is recirculated back into the combustion system where it is burned. The new arrangement prevents even the smallest quantities of fuel from entering boating waters.

The re-cycling system has a secondary advantage, too: that trace of oil which used to get away from the motor is now fed back to the rig's innards in such a way that it improves lubrication.

Noting this, one ecologist observed: "This is typical of an engineering advance designed to improve man's environment. The spin-off, as always, is a technically improved product from the pure performance standpoint."

Lowered ratio of oil to gasoline, engineered by motor manufacturers in recent years, has contributed to substantially reduced smoke emission. Lowered ratio, teamed with the new cleaner-burning outboard oils, has all but eliminated "blue haze" from the wake of a well tuned outboard.

The ultimate, from one manufacturer, is a pair of four-stoke-cycle outboards in which absolutely no oil is mixed with the gasoline. Nothing is discharged overboard except warm water and clean exhaust.

Strange as it seems at first blush, several engineering advances, primarily designed to soup up performance, have made modern outboards gentler on our air and water.

A good example is capacitor discharge ignition working together with surface gap spark plugs. This hot-shot combo was invented to improve both high and low speed performance while minimizing plug fouling.

The immediate result of its application was hotter all around performance. And a secondary, if unexpected, blessing was a cleaner running engine spawned by more efficient combustion.

Separate fuel tanks, supplied with virtually all outboards, spell convenience to most boatmen. To the ecologist, however, they portend cleaner boating water.

One environmental protectionist explained it this way: "Most oil, gas, and harmful volatiles enter boating waters at the marina or gas dock, originating with fuel spills. The old-fashioned outboard, with its tank hanging over the water, was a frequent offender. Boatmen found it all but impossible to gas it without spilling some mix in the water. The newer portable tanks, however, are filled conveniently, either inboard, on the dock, or ashore. Obviously they cause fewer spills."

As far as noise pollution is concerned, it hardly need be mentioned that the modern outboard whispers softly, where the old kicker roared with a throaty bellow.

The range of ecology-kind outboards introduced for 1972 runs from a flyweight one-lung canoe motor, up to brawny beasts boasting 140 horsepower. Interesting thing, noted by one observer with a head for figures, is that the horses get cheaper as the motors get powerful.

A quick computation shows that the 2 horsepower motors at $180 cost $90 per horse. At the upper reaches, one motor of 150 horsepower costs $1,830; and that comes to only $13 per horse. Quite an eye opener, eh? Looking at motors in the middle, a 10 horsepower rig costs $50 per horsepower; and a 40 horsepower outfit is only $19 per nag. By the time the buyer gets to 100 horsepower, he pays but $15, approximately, for each horsepower in his $1,550 outfit.

A FREQUENT CAUSE of accidents around boats is the practice of trying to step from the pier into the boat while carrying a motor or other piece of equipment. Too often the boatman winds up in the water. Place the equipment at the end of the pier. Step into the boat without it. Then pick up the equipment and put it into its place.

Certain Amount Of Savvy Is Essential For Powerboating

What would you do if your engine wouldn't start?

What's wrong if a warm engine won't get going?

What's actually happening when your boat is idling rough, and why would a motor act sluggish at full throttle?

If you don't know the answer to these questions, well, you've got some learning to do, and all of it should be done before going out with your rig again. Many boatmen are not familiar with the mechanics of an outboard, but certainly should have some basic knowledge of its actions.

JUST IN CASE you're one of those who is unsure of himself, the Evinrude News Service is prepared to give you some basic instructions to help you further understand your outboard.

For example, if your engine refuses to start, first check the fuel system. Make sure the tank isn't empty and the fuel lines aren't kinked.

Also check to see that the line is firmly connected at both ends and that it's not being pinched under a tank or at any other spot.

If a warm engine won't start, chances are it's flooded. In this case, disconnect the fuel line at the motor, advance the throttle and pull the starter rope several times. Then, after reconnecting the line, squeeze the priming bulb and try it again.

ROUGH IDLING is another common problem, but is also one which can be easily corrected. Turn the low speed carburetor setting knob slowly until the engine smooths out. Defective spark plugs and improper fuel mixtures can also cause this problem.

If the motor is sluggish at full throttle, poor spark plugs will probably be the answer. Simple inspections can be run to see if they have been fouled or burned, and if they have, the plugs should be replaced.

While the sluggish mood of the boat may be caused by the plugs, many owners have found that marine growth on the hull can also be a big factor. If you find this to be the case, pull the boat out of the water and clean it immediately. If the marine life is allowed to dry and harden, the job will be twice as hard.

ONE OTHER problem that a boatman might come across is excessive vibration while the boat is running. This is often due to a bent or broken propeller. If the prop is in good shape, check to be sure weeds haven't caught on the lower unit.

These common problems can possibly become larger if they aren't handled correctly.

All boatmen should have, knowledge of these occurrences and know how to search for the problem. Just to play safe, however, all rigs should be brought to a local marine dealer for periodic inspections.

Inboard Power — It's Refined, Diversified And Specialized

The 1972 scope is wider, too.

The machines range from a baby one-lung sailboat auxiliary, up to a V-8 of over 500 horsepower; and the spread of diesel power is greater than ever.

EVEN MORE impressive than the sheer number of engines, is the manner in which they are adapted to specific jobs: most of the gas engines and many diesels are offered with outdrives. Many are married to V-drives, and there are some engine-jet drive combos available.

Most startling of all: the turbine engine has made its debut at the show, not just as an attention-getter, but as an honest workhorse marine engine, complete with accessories and ready to get going. Matter of fact, the turbine model in the New York show has already been applied to Chris-Craft and Pacemaker boats. Its future looks bright.

There's a pattern to the wide sweep of power on the show floor: sailboat auxiliaries from about 15 to 50 horsepower, both gas and diesel, are four cylinder mills, often having equipment making them especially suitable for sailboat service.

CONSERVATIVE "workhorse" engines from roughly 70 to 160 hp are usually straight sixes of ample displacement, moderate revolutions-per-minute, single carburetor, and accessible fittings. In this power class there are also several V-6 power plants.

Above the 175 horsepower level, the V-8 engine all but sweeps the board in the gasoline models, while diesels break up into types such as straights, V's, and horizontals; the biggest diesels even become twin-Vs.

But engineering refinements are even more apparent than diversity of models.

Many engines, including some of the diesels, have been re-vamped to offer lower profiles, allowing them to be installed in tighter quarters. Also, smaller transmissions, most of them hydraulically shifted, have been fitted to these engines to still further reduce their bulk.

AS A MATTER of fact, on most marine powerplants above about 100 horsepower, the lightweight hydraulic marine transmission has pretty much swept the board, contributing substantially to the minaturization of the pleasure-boat engine.

The turbocharger, an exhaust-gas-driven ultra-speed turbine air compressor for supercharging, is proliferating. By increasing inlet manifold pressure, the charger helps the engine breath deeply, thus it increases out-put power with little increase in overall weight.

Because they enjoy increased effective cylinder pressures, turbocharged engines can develop high horsepower at lower revolutions. Therefore, the turbine not only adds to power, but can also increase engine longevity, surprising as that may seem.

NUMEROUS other engineering advances are in store this season:

Marine alternators with capacities from 30 to 100 amperes are found in place of the older conventional generator. Small sailboat auxiliaries are offered with optional oversize alternators, making the little engine a double-duty source of power for both propulsion and electricity.

Neat, well-engineered wiring harnesses replace less formal wiring.

FRESH WATER cooling is standard on just about all the diesels, and is an option on most of the gas power plants.

Improved flame arrestors and dual diaphragm fuel pumps make the gaoline engines safer than ever. In this safety engineered pump, if the primary diaphragm should spring a leak, the secondary one takes over, and the operator is signaled that it's time to replace the pump. In the meantime the pump continues to function, and no gasoline drips into the crankcase or bilge.

THE PIER IS THE PLACE TO MAKE YOUR BEST APPEARANCE

HOW YOU HANDLE your boat at and around piers can make or break your reputation for boatmanship, for that is where you are most likely to have spectators observing your seamanship. An approach to the pier should always be made at slow speed, heading into the tide, current or wind. When the bow is close to the pier, toss out a line. One end of the line is secured to the bow of the boat, the other end to the pier. The driver should then shift the motor into reverse, turn it toward the pier, and back in. A stern line can then be secured to the pier. And all is taken care of, with no danger of your craft banging against the dock and sustaining damage.

A Bucket Of Cement Won't Do The Job As A Boating Anchor

It's no matter whether your boat is heavy or light, long or short or old or new — your boat needs a good anchor.

The selction of a good working anchor is a necessity for safety in boating, explains the Evinrude News Service. It's merely an old tale that a bucket filled with cement or a concrete block will do a sufficient job, simply because of their lack of holding power. On a stormy day, these homemade anchors will not keep a boat from drifting.

Instead, Evinrude recommends two types of anchors, the mushroom and the Danforth.

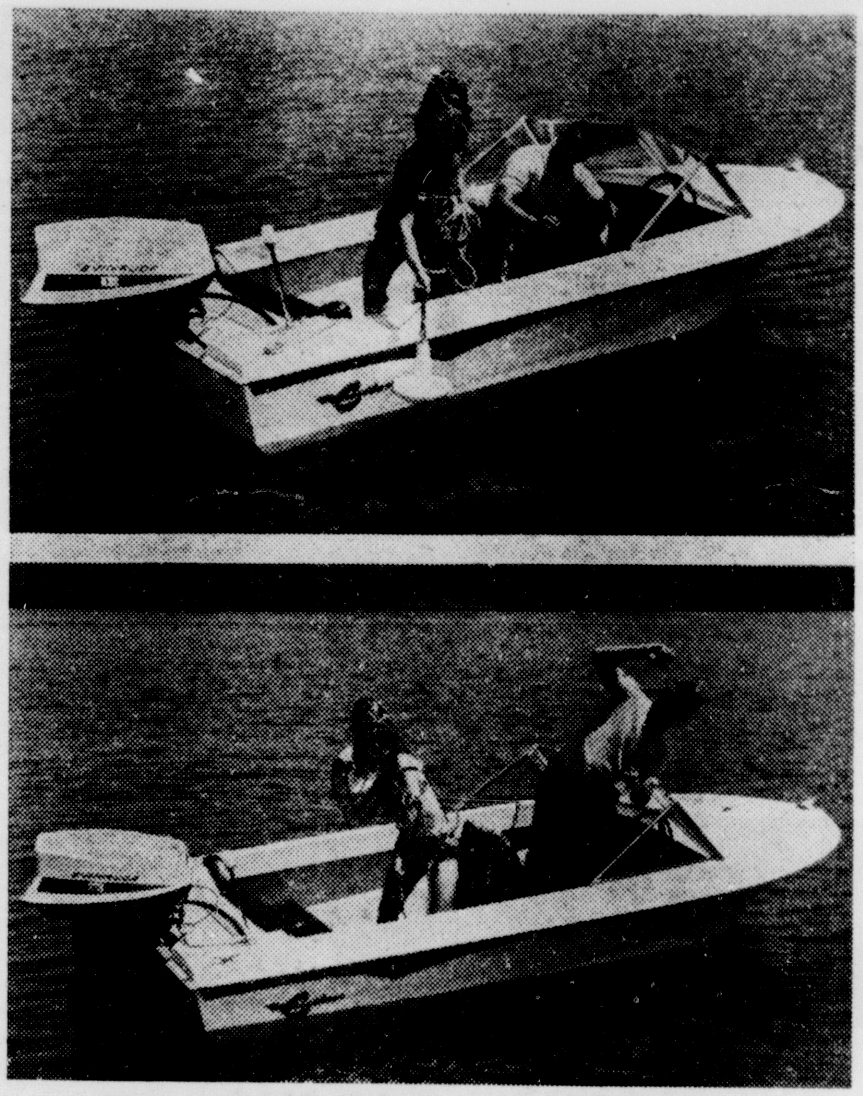
The mushroom is particularly suited for permanent mooring where there's a soft or mud bottom. The Danforth style settles quickly and has good holding power, even on hard sand or rocky bottom. A short, stockless anchor might do the job, but be sure to first check with a marine dealer for recommendations. The type of anchor you need will depend on the size of your boat and the kind of bottom you most often encounter.

Anchors are rated by "holding power," so that the heavier your boat or the rougher the water, the more holding power is required from your anchor.

Another thing to keep in mind when preparing to throw out the anchor is the safe ratio of length of anchor line to depth of water. In moderate weather, the ratio stands at six to one. If you anchor in 10 feet of water, for example, sixty feet of line is needed. On the other hand, if there is neither breeze nor current, only half of that is sufficient.

The six-to-one ratio, however, is still better for an overnight anchoring or unattended boat.

Here are just a few other important things to remember when anchoring: examine the anchor, checking that the line is secured properly; don't try to be a star shotputter with the anchor, just slowly lower it alongside the boat; have the anchor line coiled clear for running; never stand on or in the coil when letting the anchor drop.



A DUNKING IS the most probable result of careless handling of an anchor. Never try to throw or "shotput" the anchor. Instead, slowly and carefully, drop it into the water next to the boat with the line straight and free to move. Then you will be no menace to yourself, or to the others in your watercraft. The top photo is the right way, the bottom photo is the wrong way.

There's New Deal In Ship-To-Shore Radio

In accordance with Federal Communications Commission decree, the deadline for installing and licensing the old-type radio-telephones for marine communications came and passed on Dec. 31, 1971.

Now manufacturers are pushing new VHF-FM ship-to-shore and ship-to-ship units.

BUYERS WILL find the new sets lower in output power than the old ones, since the FCC limits them to 25 watts to avoid the interference that plagued the conventional channels.

Owners of the medium frequency sets, however, can continue to use them for another five years.

In the very high VHF frequencies, radio waves travel in a line of sight pattern and do not follow the curvature of the earth over the horizon. Hence, excessive power would be wasted anyway. Their frequency modulated (FM) transmission produces clear, static-free communications that will be welcomed by boatmen familiar with the snap, crackle and pop common to AM radios.

FOR THOSE who have installed VHF-FM radiotelephones and who will be cruising beyond their range — ,more than 20 miles offshore — the FCC has authorized single side-band radiotelephones. More expensive than VHF-FM, these radios can reach up to thousands of miles.

Budget shoppers can compare citizens band two-way radios.

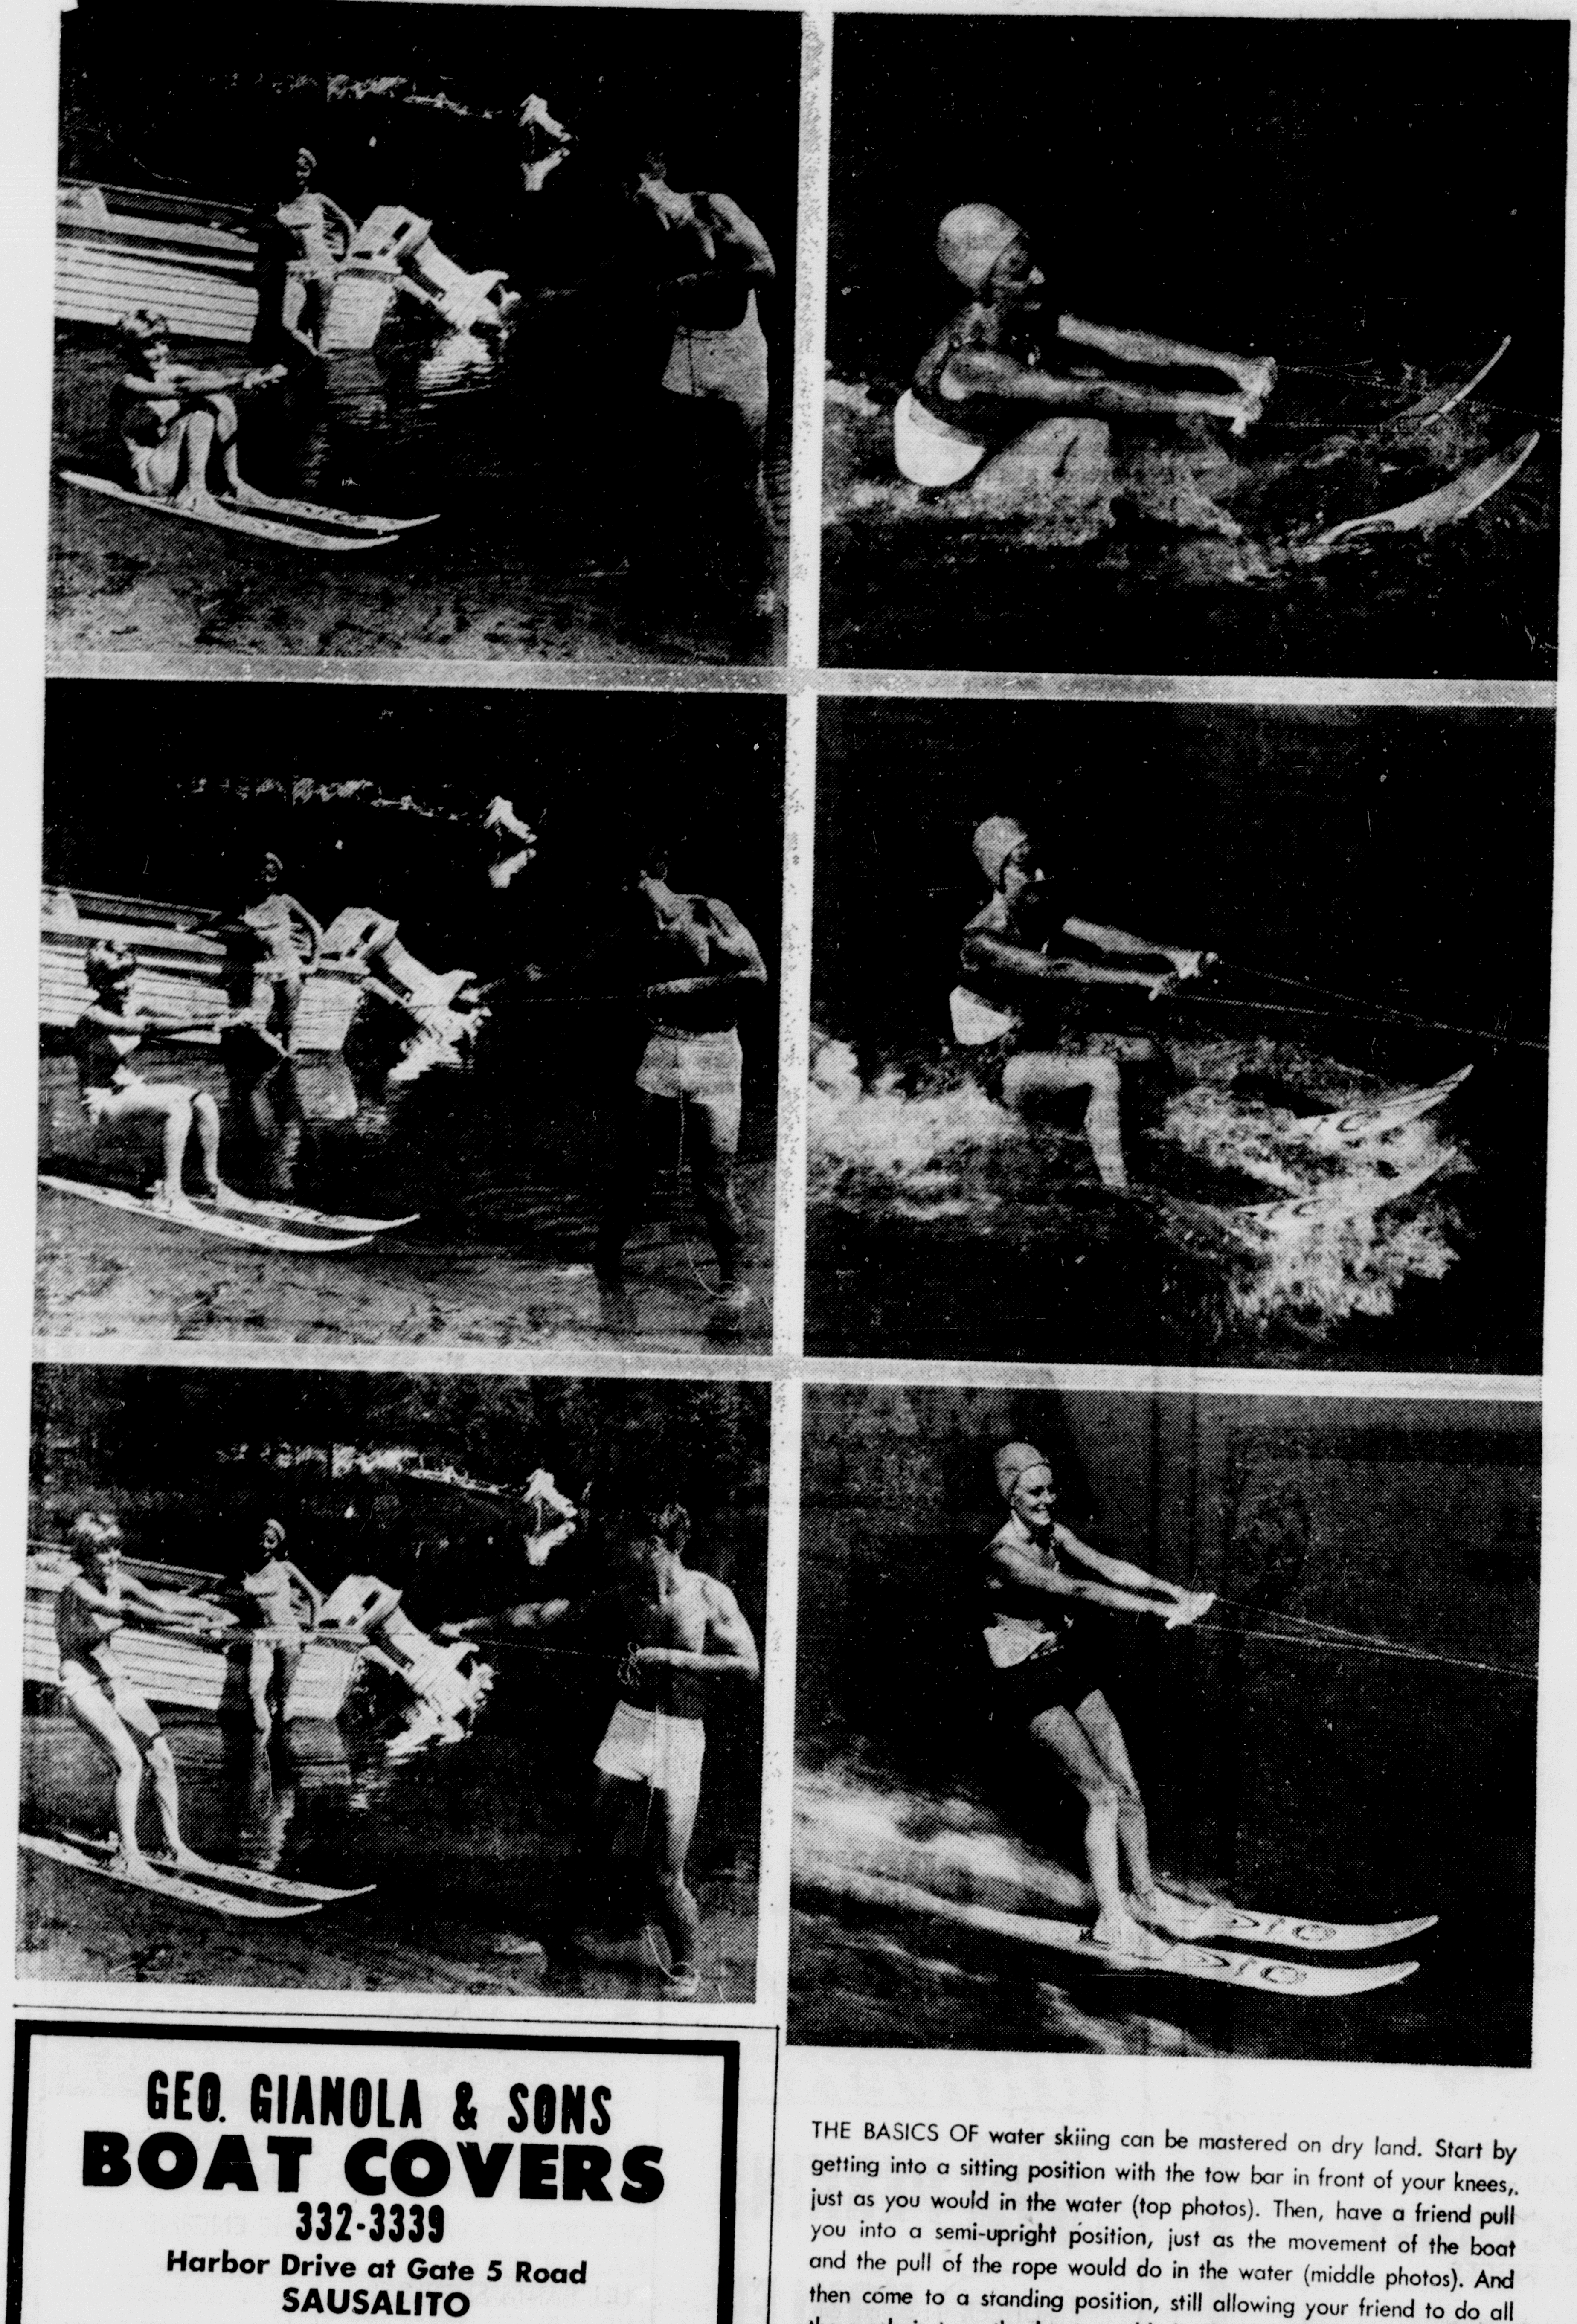
Dry Land Start In Water Skiing —

Practice In The Living Room



THE BASICS OF water skiing can be mastered on dry land. Start by getting into a sitting position with the tow bar in front of your knees,, just as you would in the water (top photos). Then, have a friend pull you into a semi-upright position, just as the movement of the boat and the pull of the rope would do in the water (middle photos). And then come to a standing position, still allowing your friend to do all the work just as the boat would do if you were actually skiing on water (lower photos). Do not try to get up yourself. In this sequence in the three photos on the left the pulling action of the friend simulates the pulling action of the tow boat as shown in the sequence of the three photos on the right. It is even possible to practice in the living room, so that you will be that far ahead of the game once you tackle the real sport. Another advantage is that the dry land practice is a good strengthener for the very muscles you will be using the most when you actually water ski. It is an excellent method for preparing yourself so as to avoid muscular strain and soreness.

Do you want to enjoy an outdoor sport that is not only challenging but also lots of fun? If you do, then water skiing is for you.

This might also explain why more than 10 million people each year participate in this easy-to-learn activity, and it can even be learned on dry land.

THE DRY LAND practice is a confidence-building technique which also tones muscles to gain skiing control.

With the help of a partner, preferably one who is an experienced skier, one can actually learn the basic anywhere, whether it be on the beach or even in someone's living room. All that's needed is a pair of skis and a tow line.

Before actual instruction begins, deep knee bends should be practiced to loosen the leg muscles and improve your sense of balance. Then, grasp the tow line and have your partner lower you to a crouched, sitting position until the tow bar is just in front of the knees.

WITH ARMS straight and elbows between the knees, your partner should pull you to a standing position. Let him do the pulling; don't try to stand up yourself. Repeat this procedure several times. This action generally simulates the pulling action of the outboard-powered boat pulling you to the water's surface.

While the legs should remain rigid enough to keep the skis parallel, maintain some flexibility with the knees bent to react to waves or turns.

All skiers, whether they are good swimmers or not, should wear a life jacket or ski belt. Even the best of swimmers can be momentarily placed in shock by a tumble into the water.

Skis can be obtained in any price range and also from a variety of types, including conventional, slalom, trick and jumping. The length depends on the weight of the skier.

FROM THE aspect of fun and uafety, however, the teamwork between the tow boat driver and skier is most important. The driver must keep the tow line taut and know exactly how much power is needed to keep the skier on top of the water.

The addition of an observer in the boat with the driver is also important to the safety of all.

Water skiing is not only challenging and easy to learn, but is also lots of fun if the basic skills are understood and some common sense in safety is used.

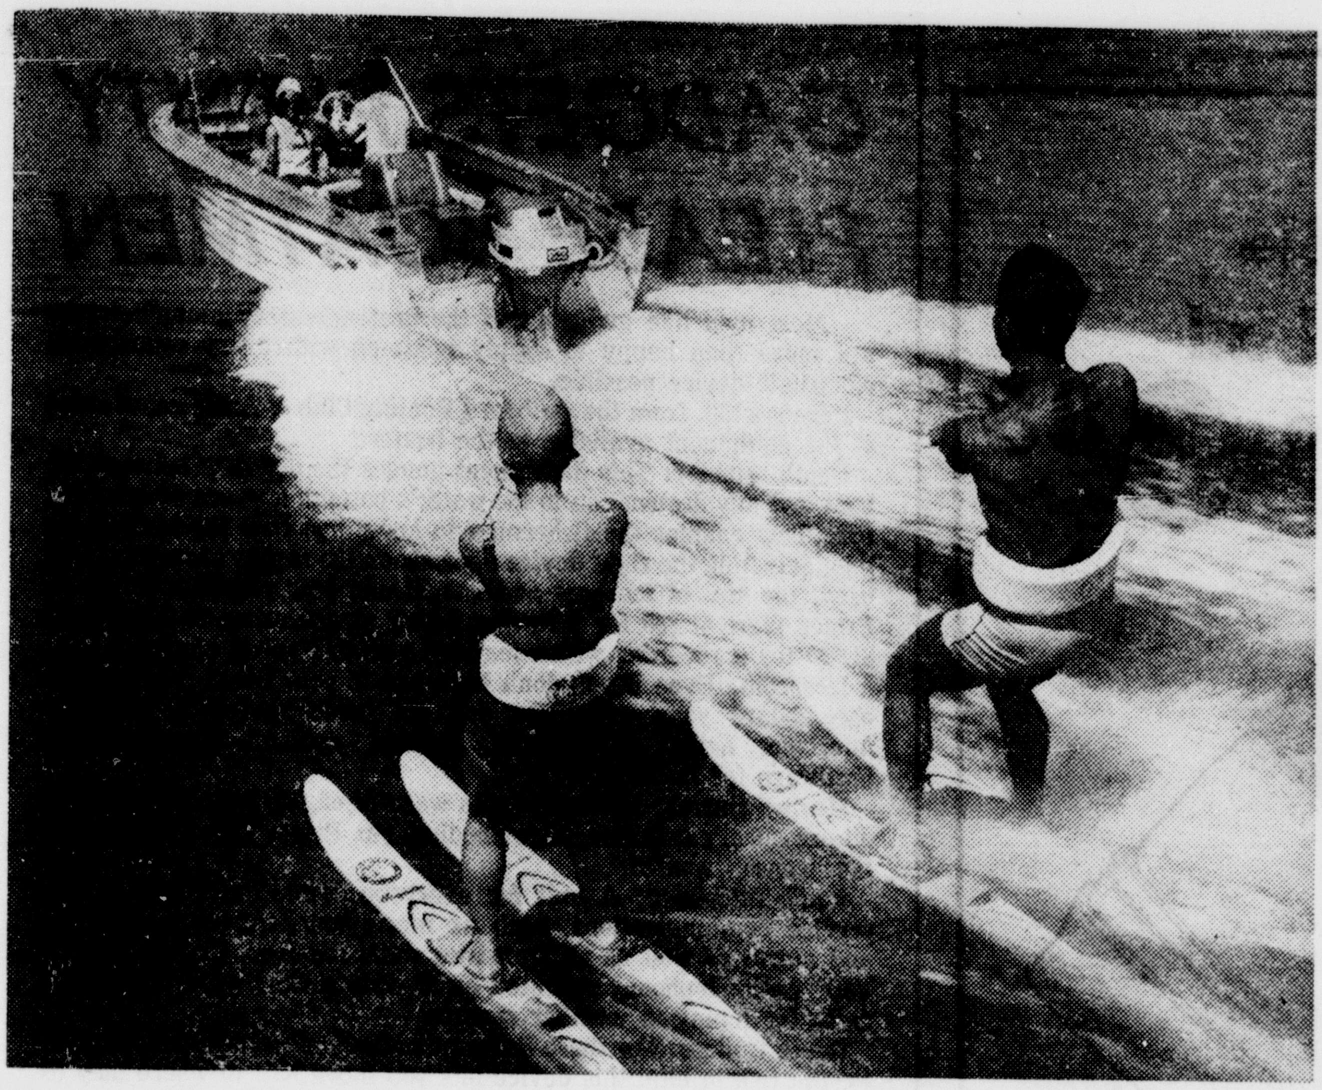
CUSTOM WORK



IT IS IMPORTANT always to have an observer present with the driver in the boat towing water skiers. While the driver can remain alert for obstructions or congestion ahead of his boat, the observer can keep a close watch on the skiers and relay their messages to the driver.

Close Teamwork Is Essential For Driver And Skier Safety

Evinrude Motors advises that it is just as important to have a competent driver as it is to be properly trained in the art of water skiing.

Teamwork is the determining factor in the skier's safety. The driver and skier should be able to understand each other's signals, and an observer should be in the boat to relay all messages.

THE DRIVER'S most important job is simply to remain alert at all times. During the ride, experienced skiers might execute tricks and turns, and this will cause him to miss seeing obstructions or congested areas in front of him.

The starting position is one of the most important parts of the entire ski run. As a result, the driver must be sure to have the boat positioned in such a way as to follow a straight course. This will help the skier gain his balance before having to execute a turn.

In addition, the line must be kept taut and ready for take-off until the skier gives the "hit it" signal, which means that he's ready for the ride. The driver must also be prepared for any strong winds or currents which can force the boat off the course before starting.

THE TOW BOAT driver has the responsibility of avoiding many things throughout the course of a normal ski run. He must stay away from piers, swimming beaches, shallow water and weed-choked and congested areas in order to insure the safety of the skier, as well as the safety of others.

Respect for the rights of others is a sign of a competent driver. He should give boats a wide berth and keep his distance from fishermen and skin-divers.

It Requires The Proper Propeller

A correct propeller for water skiing is necessary to make the activity enjoyable and insure good tow boat performance.

Skiing demands instant thrust to pull a skier to the water's surface, and additional thrust is needed to pull as many as two or three skiers at one time.

Many standard props, however, are not designed to handle such an order, and a discussion with a marine dealer should be considered essential before finding the proper propeller.

It is also possible, however, to choose two or three props and run tests to find the one that allows the engine to turn in its rated revolutions-per-minute (rpm) range while pulling the skiers. This rpm range is usually between 4,500 and 5,500.

Checking the engine rpm with a tachometer is another manner in which to find the correct propeller to use. Your marine dealer can run this test, and can also advise you if a change is needed.

Remember that if your motor isn't giving you the kind of performance that was expected, start by checking the propeller. With medium and high horsepower engines, the change in props can make a great difference.

State Will Crack Down On Unregistered Craft

The California Department of Navigation and Ocean Development has asked all boating law enforcement agencies throughout the state to cite boats with no current registration.

John Bennett, department director, noted that several thousand boats that are required to be registered are either displaying expired decals or are not displaying numbers at all.

Bennett stated, "Registration numbers play an important role in boating safety, including search and rescue, theft prevention and craft identification. A properly displayed number with a current registration sticker is added protection to the boatman in trouble."

Registration fees are used to build boating facilities and finance boating safety and enforcement activities throughout the state.

The department advises all boatmen to check their boats for proper number display and stickers. Boatmen who have failed to register their craft are urged to do so at their local Department of Motor Vehicles Office to avoid an embarrassing and perhaps costly boarding this summer.

GADGETS PLENTY PLEASE BOATMEN

Most men like gadgets and the boat accessory manufacturers are more than happy to supply boatmen with every conceivable electronic device possible.

Here's a list, from the Outboard Boating Club of America, of some of the equipment available to the boater:

Depth sounder: This instrument gauges the distance between the boat and any destruction to the water's bottom, a wreck or school of fish. This enables the fisherman to know just how far to drop his line. Selecting the right device depends on the depths of waters to be used, the size of the boat and budget and how you plan to use it. Prices start at $85 for a flasher which measures up to 100 feet to $1,000 for a recorder which features variable speed charts.

Intercom: Even if you don't have one in your home, you can get one aboard your boat. You can get these as low as $100 for intercom, hailer, microphone, speaker and all the necessary hardware for installation.

Marine alarms: Different units warn of engine over-heating, low oil pressure, gas fumes, bilge flooding, etc. Prices vary according to the "sense" wanted.

Radio-Telephone: A unit for everyone. Some units include full service communications, such as megaphone, intercom, foghorn, and alarm as well as all transistor radio receiver. Or you can get VHF radiotelephones operated on 25-watt power; or a three-band radio for tuning in weather reports.

Depth trollers: For those fishermen who don't want to sit and wait for the fish to bite, this device lets you move bait to where they're "biting good."

Barometer: Measures the pressure exerted by the atmosphere — it gives the weather conditions. An aneroid barometer can be as small as a pocket watch, but for ease of reading and greater accuracy, something the size of a clock is better for the boatman. You don't have to spend vast sums of money to get adequate precision —pay what you would for a reliable clock.

Radar: Some units are as small as a breadbox, but costs are a bit high. Radar is almost a necessity on larger boats at night or in fog.

All these don't include the normal range of gadgets boatmen want, such as tachometer, speedometer, fuel gauge, foghorn, etc.

If you have lots of money, there's no limit to how many instruments you can get.

Don't Rush Into Project Of Building Your Boat

Some want to own a "different" boat, one uniquely adapted to special purposes. Some hope to wind up with a larger craft than they could otherwise afford. Others do it as an absorbing hobby and for the sense of accomplishment.

Whatever your reason, say the boating experts at Mercury outboards, you should realize that building a boat can be quite a task. Don't rush into it without thinking it over. You need good tools and a comfortable work place.

A good level of manual skill and a knack for understanding mechanical drawings are necessary for more ambitious projects.

IF YOUR objective is to save money, look before you leap. Modern mass boat production makes use of elaborate machinery and material is purchased by the carload. If you build a boat, you'll pay retail prices for wood, hardware and paint — and it can add up.

A small pram can contain $75 worth of material bought at retail. You can buy an aluminum john boat for about the same price.

Before deciding to build, shop the used boat market. You might find a suitable used craft that needs reconditioning, which you can buy and fix up with less expenditure of time, sweat and money. Its resale value could be higher, too.

IF YOUR plans do list materials, visit lumber and hardware outlets to get prices and an idea of what the boat might cost. Allow for breakage, reworking and incidentals when figuring out the total.

Kit boats are not nearly as common as they once were. Kits enjoyed a spurt of popularity some years ago when the boating boom began and there were not as many boat dealers. Today mass-produced boats are so widely available and on time payment plans that the market for kits has dwindled.

Northern California Guide On Where You Can Canoe

"Canoeing Waters of Northern California" is a looseleaf booklet written by Ann Dwyer of Kentfield for Marin Canoe Club members and for others interested in the sport and looking for waters upon which to enjoy it.

It is available at some bookstores, or can be ordered for $3.50 from Canoes West, Post Office Box 61, Kentfield, Calif.

Mrs. Dwyer received her Red Cross canoe instructor certificate in 1962 and has taught canoeing continuously since then. She and Gwen Kleeman launched Canoes West in 1971 as a firm selling canoes, kayaks, rubber rafts and the equipment and gear needed for those sports.

"Canoeing Waters of Northern California," she says, is intended primarily for beginners, and thus most of the waters listed are "fairly easy." Later, she says, more difficult waters will be added. And she hopes the book will eventually be published in regular hardcover format.

Of the book in its present form, the Pacific Paddler, edited by Ann Schafer of Woodland Hills, for California canoeists, said: "No Pacific Division member should be without a copy."

Average Age

The average age of first-time purchasers of outboard equipment is 42.1 years.

Canoe Trails Charted

A new book, "Makens Guide to U.S. Canoe Trails," is available to outdoors enthusiasts interested in exploring new rivers and streams in various parts of the country.

Billed as the most complete compilation yet assembled, the book is intended by its author, James C. Makens of the University of Dallas in Irving, Tex., to show that there are good canoeing rivers in most every section of the country. In all, the guide lists thousands of miles of canoe trails, on some 900 rivers in 49 states.

For most of the rivers, the 86-page booklet details launching and take-out sites, gives difficulty ratings and describes rough-water areas at various levels, and outlines points of special interest along the trails.

The trail directory, in a convenient glove-compartment size, is available through many bookstores and Grumman dealers, or direct from the publisher, LeVoyageur Publishing Co., 1319 Wentwood Drive, Irving, Tex., 75060, at $4.95.

Boat Trailering Made Safe, Easy

WITH A little practice, the launching of a boat can become a simple project. But be sure to have at least one — preferable two — people to help the driver as he backs the trailer into the water. One of the aides can be used as a guide. The other can hold the lead line from the bow, thus making sure that the boat doesn't drift away after hitting the water. That is a frequent mishap in one-man launchings.

Practice, a professionally-built trailer and a little know-how is all it takes to trailer your boat to better and bigger waters.

Before starting out on any trip, check your boat and trailer. Know what your car and trailer can do. If you don't have an owner's manual, ask your dealer. You may need special equipment for your car, such as heavy-duty shock absorbers and rear view mirrors.

THE CAR'S trailer hitch is important. You should have a hitch rated to carry the kind of load to be pulled. Wheel bearings should be well lubricated. Load capacities prescribed by the trailer manufacturer should be strictly followed.

The boat should also be positioned properly or the boat will sway while being towed and you may damage the hull. Do not trail the boat with the outboard motor in a down position. Be sure the tie-downs are taut and locked.

Anchors, chains, trailer jack and tool kits should not be kept aboard the boat while towing — the car trunk is a far better storage place. If it is necessary to carry such equipment in the boat, be sure they are secured so they won't move about.

DRIVING IS most important if you expect to get to your destination. You'll need more room to turn because the trailer tracks inside the car on a curve and it takes more room and power to pass. You should drive a little slower than you normally would and try braking a few times at various speeds to see how much distance it takes you to stop.

And it's a good idea to stop every so often (possibly every hour) to inspect your rig to be sure everything is safe and secure.

Launching a boat from a trailer usually is a two-person job, with one person acting as a guide for the driver. The helper can watch the rear of the trailer as the driver backs up and call out instructions to line up at the right angle to the shore.

THE FOUR launching steps basic to practically all trailers are:

Remove the rear tie-downs when a few feet from the edge of the water.

Next, be sure the motor is tilted up and unlock the bow winch but keep the boat snubbed right. If your trailer is the tilt-bed type, release tilting mechanism (but don't tilt the trailer bed until you're ready to slide the boat into the water).

Back up until the trailer wheels are in the water an inch or two, set your hand brake and put the car in gear. Give the boat a firm push down the trailer.

Unfasten the launching line or cable and reel it in — but be sure to keep the boat from drifting by holding a line attached to the bow. Pull the empty trailer up to a sheltered spot, park the car and you're ready to go.

A PHOTO record of the good times they have enjoyed together on the water is something that all members of the family will treasure for many, many years. But there are certain tricks to good photography taken on the water. You don't just go out and start snapping the shutter. Once those special techniques have been mastered, then your photos can capture the excitement and the fun that is distinctive of boating, water skiing, swimming and all the other water pleasures.

USE YOUR CAMERA

Keep A Record Of Boating Season

Another boating season is here and one way to keep it from becoming just a blurred memory is to record it on film —from start to finish.

The best opening scenes are those fitting-out chores —sandpapering, painting, etc. — then the launch, and from there the possibilities are unlimited.

Many persons prefer movies but boating is one place where still pictures or color slides, especially when taken in sequence, can do almost as good a job of picturing action as movies, simply because boating action is rarely continuous.

An adjustable camera that can be set for action-stopping fast shutter speeds is an asset. Stopping the action overcomes — at least partially — one of the difficulties of boating photography, camera movement resulting from the pitch and roll of the boat.

More expensive cameras are designed to set the correct lens opening automatically. Without this type of camera, a light meter to measure the intensity of the sunlight is a big help.

In addition to providing pictures of the boat, its occupants and memorable cruises that will be enjoyed for years to come, there are other instances where a camera might prove helpful. Here are a few of them:

Help teach beginners boatmanship and improve the boatman's own techniques, especially where it involves sailboat racing.

Improve the performance of the boat.

Save time as well as money in substantiating losses for income tax purposes and insurance claims, facilitate recovery of stolen articles, and minimize possibilities of lengthy, expensive legal action.

THE LAST POINT is one of the most important.

For example, the Internal Revenue Service accepts photographic evidence to substantiate losses due to fire, theft, hurricane, etc. It also allows a reasonable cost for taking the supporting photographs as part of a justifiable claim.

Closeup pictures of valuable equipment such as compass radio, depth finder, help police track them down if they are stolen. On the back of each picture should be noted the date purchased and where, serial number and price.

Pictures also can help provide evidence in court actions that might result from an accident, such as a collision with another boat.

One thing to remember. No one has to be a technical wizard to be assured of good picture results with today's new cameras. They do practically everything automatically except point the lens.

Billion In Taxes

The tax on motorboat fuel accounted for 26 million of the 356 million dollars total placed in the Federal Land and Water Recreation Fund during fiscal 1971, according to the Boating Industry Associations. Since the fund's inception in 1965, nearly a billion dollars has been distributed for acquisition and maintenance of outdoor recreation equipment.

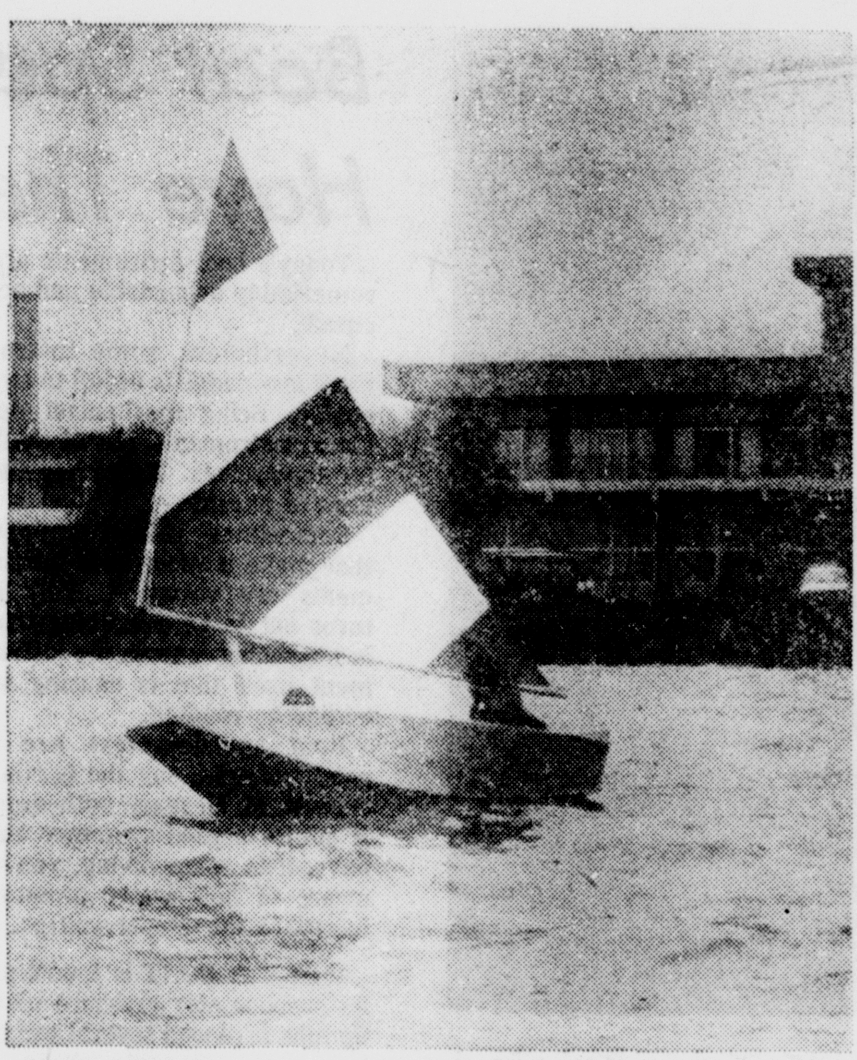
It's Easy To Catch Sailing Fever



SCHEDULED FOR early 1972 delivery is this new sailing craft from Fold-A-Bout of 100 Hegenberger Road, Oakland. It is being built in 12 and 14-foot lengths, constructed of marine aluminum. Its makers say it is the first folding sailboat to be constructed of that material.

The world of sailing can be yours for as little as the price of renting a sailboat on a small sheltered lake.

But watch it — you might get hooked on this growing sport and buy a boat yourself. You'll join the estimated 643,000 other people who sail.

All sailboats have four basic parts in common — the hull, sails, centerboard (keel) and rudder. Sailboat hulls are designed differently than motorboat hulls. They're designed to slip through the water and to resist the tipping effect of the wind, rather than to skim over the surface as a motorboat does.

THE SAIL, of course, catches the wind to move the boat. To prevent the boat from sliding sideways, all boats need a centerboard or keel which also acts as a pivot when turning the boat. And the rudder steers the boat, often with a tiller.

There's a sailboat model to fit every purse and a sailing board or dinghy is perfect for the beginning sailor. Sailboat lengths range from 8 feet to 50 feet. You can buy an eight-foot model to hold one or two people often for less than $500. Larger craft can cost $1,000 per foot!

Daysailers are relatively simple to set up — most models have only one sail (the mainsail), no winches and the rudder might even be removeable.

These boats are lightweight and portable (some can easily be lifted atop a car by one person). Models are also built for easy righting if capsized.

DIAGRAMS, step-by-step procedures and photos in "how-to" books will provide the novice sailor with the basics before he tries the boat in the water. Also, before venturing out, the boating rules of the road should be learned. A life jacket should be donned for the initial ventures.

After learning to rig your boat, learn to handle your boat in relation to the wind. This does take some practice. However, there are rewards — when you've learned how to sail with the wind (running), against the wind (tacking), and across the wind (reaching), you can graduate to a larger boat or a bigger body of water.

A 16-foot sloop can comfortably seat a family of four for a day of sailing. Or if you plan to weekend cruise, you can buy a sailboat with cabin, galley and head. Running lights are Coast Guard requirements for any night-time nagivation.

BOATING IN 1971 — SOME STATISTICS

Here are some U.S. boating statistical highlights from 1971:

5,128,345 boats numbered by the states and the Coast Guard.
44,905,000 Americans enjoyed the sport.
8,981,000 recreational boats were in use in America:

Boat Speedometers Have Their Quirks

Nevertheless, some instrument knowledge is useful to any boater. Being mechanical devices, instruments cannot think for themselves. They obey the laws of physics.

Sometimes things happen that make it seem as if instruments are wrong. Usually it turns out to be something that is happening outside the instrument itself that is causing an erroneous reading.

Boat speedometers are a good example, say the boating experts at Mercury outboards. If you're a good swimmer and have done some diving, you're aware of how water pressure increases the deeper you go.

WHEN A BOAT is launched, its speedometer pressure pick-up tube is placed several inches below the water's surface. Slight pressure is built up in the flexible line that connects the tube to the speedometer. A good speedometer is sensitive enough for even this slight amount of pressure to affect it, and so it may read two or three miles an hour the moment the boat is launched.

Good boat speedometer installations include a "bleeder valve" which can be opened momentarily after launching to release unwanted pressure from the line and make the needle go back to zero.

At lower speeds, water flows around a boat differently than it does at high speed. Sometimes this affects water pressure in the vicinity of the pick-up tube so thataccuracy is affected. At speeds under 10 miles an hour even a quality speedometer can be thrown slightly off for this reason.

A HULL'S KEEL strips and the motor's lower unit disturb the water and push it aside at higher speeds. If a pick-up tube happens to be located on the transom where it can "feel" some of this pressure, again its accuracy may be affected.

Install your pickup tube according to directions which come with the instrument.

Expectsome time-lag between opening the throttle and achieving full and steady reading on the speedometer. Because of propeller slippage, boat acceleration lags slightly behind motor acceleration.

Water Craft Total Hits 5,380 Mark

By WAT TAKESHITA

Recreational boating is rapidly becoming the nation's top family sport, and Marin is no exception.

Because the county is surrounded by water, and dotted with inlets and coves that are conducive to recreational boating, the percentage of Marin residents who will head for the water to sail, cruise, ski and fish at every opportunity probably ranks among the highest in the nation.

During this 1971-72 fiscal year, the office of Marin County Assessor Bert Broemmel estimates that the county has 5,380 pleasure boats of all kinds, (not including boats in the inventory of dealers) with a market value of $17,445,000. During the 1970-71 fiscal year, Marin had an estimated 5,213 boats valued at $15,781,900.

BOAT OWNERSHIP in Marin runs about one craft per 12 households.

Assistant Assessor Herschel Johnson said that the number of boats has risen steadily during the past 10 years but comparable figures are not available because houseboats and store inventory were lumped together with privately owned pleasurecraft a decade ago.

County records show that in 1962-63 there were 5,291 boats in Marin County with a total market value of $12,470,130. These figures included both houseboats and dealer inventory.

Marin boat dealers and marine suppliers foresee a boom in sales this year because of the mild weather and the general uptrend in economic conditions.

Their annual year-end report says that boats and motors sold in 1971 tended to be bigger than ever. The average length of outboard boats sold during the year was 15.6 feet compared with 15.4 feet the previous year. Outboard motors sold in 1971 averaged 35.6 horsepower, compared with 31 horsepower in 1970.

Other figures compiled in the year-end report show that an estimated 44,905,000 Americans went boating more than once or twice during 1971. The nation's recreational fleet is pegged at $8,981,000 boats of all types, more than double the total of 20 years ago.

OUTBOARD BOATS total 5,315,000, followed by rowboats, canoes and dinghies estimated at 2,384,000. Sailboats and inboard boats (including sailboats with auxiliary power) are about even. The national estimate is 639,000 inboard boats as compared with 643,000 sailboats.

For Marin residents already signed up or planning to enlist in the pleasure boating navy, these pages offer a complete, up-to-date directory of essential yachting supplies and services.

Upkeep— Make It A Habit

You finally did it! You gave in to that impulse and bought a boat. There it sits in all its gleaming, pristine newness. The brightwork glistens, and the motor is tuned to perfection.

That's the joy of a new boat . . . everything works.

Want to keep it that way? It's easy if you use common sense and spend a litle time and effort on it. The Marine Service Committee of the National Assn. of Engine and Boat Manufacturers, has come up with some observations and recommendations for novice and seasoned sailor alike.

FIRST, AND most important, don't let the work pile up. It's awfully easy to come in off a day on the water and say that you'll clean the boat up tomorrow, because you're too tired to do it right away. But the next thing you know it's two weeks later, you decide to go boating and your boat's still a mess from last time. If you take a few minutes at the end of the day to wash her down, flush the engine, and put everything ship-shape, you'll be ready the next time you go out in spite of unexpected relatives.

The secret of keeping a boat in proud condition is to treat it like a member of the family. Be kind to it and attend to its needs. If it's dirty, wash it up. If it gets sick, see a specialist right away. When you leave it alone for awhile, make sure it's well attended and in good condition. Boats seems to have definite personalities, and if you treat them nicely, they'll treat you well in return.

There's really nothing sadder than to see a once proud craft, neglected and dispirited, falling apart and broken.

BOAT MAINTENANCE need not be costly, but if you let things go, one problem compounds another until you may be faced with major repairs. Modern materials have substantially reduced the need for repeated scraping and painting, and marine engines operate reliably with very little care. But some upkeep will be necessary to keep everything operating perfectly and looking new.

It's a good family pastime, working on your boat. The children, according to age and ability, can be assigned various tasks for which they will be responsible. Since a boat is a fun, family thing, the kids will take pride in doing their part. Unless you are a competent mechanic, though, leave the engine work for the professionals.

In short, your boat will be as welcome or as bothersome as you permit it to be. But you'll find that you can keep it looking like new with an amazingly small amount of effort. This will pay off in many more enjoyable hours afloat. It'll pay off at resale time, too.

KNOW YOUR 'RULES OF THE ROAD'

"Rules of the road" pertain to boating as well as to driving a car. Remember AND follow these rules, says the Outboard Boating Club of America.

—Rowboats, sailboats and other unpowered craft almost always have the right of way over powerboats. The only exception is when an unpowered craft is overtaking or passing a motorboat.

—When approaching another powerboat at an angle, the boat on the right has the right of way.

—When meeting another boat head-on, or nearly so, swing to the right. Keep to the right in narrow channels, too.

—When overtaking and passing another boat, the boat being overtaken has the right of way.

Here are a few more tips to remember when operating a boat:

Never ride parallel to another boat's wake. It will tend to throw your boat from side to side and may cause a capsize. While this is not a legal requirement, it is good seamanship.

Unless you have a boat large enough, and that means over 14 feet, don't allow passengers to stand up or change seats while you're underway. However, if you have to, stop the boat and instruct passengers to keep low and in the center of the boat and to hold on to the gunwales to steady themselves.

When anchoring, ease the anchor overboard and let the line out gradually until it hits bottom. When you weigh anchor, pull the line in slowly to avoid tipping the boat dangerously.

Check the weather before you get undr way. If the sky looks threatening, don't go out. However, if you're out and do get caught in a bad storm, have your passengers don life jackets and sit on the boat. Also, keep the bow headed at an angle into the waves. Don't try to cross a large body of water in a storm; keep as close to the shore as possible.

Outdoor Boating Club publishes a Rules of the Road poster which is available for the asking. Write OBC, 401 North Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill., 60611.

A Recommended Gas-Oil Ratio

While all boatmen should follow directions given in their owner's manual for the proper oil-gasoline mixture, Evinrude recommends a 50-to-one gas-to-oil ratio, meaning one pint of oil to every six gallons of gasoline. Regular automotive or white marine gasoline should always be used.

The company even calls its own outboard motor oil "Evinrude 50 to 1."

Although special outboard oils are usually high priced, you Lcan actually save money, according to the Evinrude News Service. In most cases it is necessary to use less oil with the new blends. They're designed to cut the gas-to-oil ratio in half.

Always remember that when filling an empty tank, it is wise to pour in only a little gas and oil at a time. First add a couple of gallons of gasoline, and then add the oil and mix well before filling the tank completely. Make sure the filler cap is properly secured.

It is advisable to also measure the oil carefully. Too much oil may cause smoking or plug fouling, and yet too little oil can result in improper lubrication. Again, the owner's manual will give the proper amounts for break-in and later running.

An extremely important point to remember is that when filling outboard fuel tanks, remove the portable tank from the boat and fill it on the gasoline pier. Because gas and its fumes are highly combustible, take no chances on spilling any gas in the boat.

Be sure to wipe any spilled gasoline off the side of the tank before taking it back on board. Naturally, extinguish all cigarettes, cigars and pipes while fueling, and prevent the possibility of a static spark by keeping the fuel nozzle in contact with the tank.

Tip To Lengthen Life Of Motor

Tip to outboard motor owners: An easy way to insure a longer life for your motor is to run the engine dry after each use. Simply disconnect the fuel line from the motor and run the engine until it cuts out. The procedure gets rid of fuel that might produce gummy deposits if left in the engine.

Look For The Fish Where The Sunlight Isn't Striking

Sun glasses may bring comfort to fishermen on bright days, but what can fish do about brilliant light?

Unlike mammals and birds, fish lack eyelids to close, and they certainly don't have sun glasses. Nor can they contract or expand the irises of their eyes to compensate for light conditions.

The fact that fish usually prefer shade is an indication that direct sunlight bothers them. This helps explain why during summer, when the sun's rays strike water at a more direct angle, the best fishing usually occurs in early morning, late evenings, or at night.

Studies by fishing experts at Mercury outboards indicate there is a relationship between the amount of sunlight penetrating the water, and the way fish behave. By understanding how fish react to sunlight, anglers can change their methods to suit conditions and have more success.

Early in the year fish seek shade under docks, bridges, overhanging banks, around large rocks and in similar places, all generally in shallow water. As a lake's water warms fish will move deeper where sunlight is diffused. How far down depends in part upon oxygen content. Remember that bass school in deep holes during the hottest part of day in summer.

Another factor the Mercury fishing department found important in selecting where to fish on bright days is the wind. Wave-chopped water breaks up the sun's penetration, scattering and diffusing the brilliant light. Fish, even minnows, choose times such as this to come nearer the surface. Cloudy, windy summer days are often good times to fish in shallow water.

Remember that when you seek relief from the sun, fish are probably doing the same thing. Look for them where the sun's light can't reach.

Power Boat Course Is Streamlined

The man behind the United States Power Squadrons' new streamlined boating education course is hopeful it will go a long way toward changing some recent U.S. Coast Guard statistics — that only one out of every four boat operators has ever had any boating safety training.

He is Walter R. Cosdon of Burbank, Calif., new chief commander of the USPS, whose 407 squadrons stretch from Boston to Okinawa and boast a membership of close to 83,000 recreational boatmen.

As chief commander of the 58-year-old nonprofit, non-government USPS, it is one of Cosdon's many chores to see that the organization's new free-of-charge instruction course in safety afloat attracts as many beginning boatmen as possible.

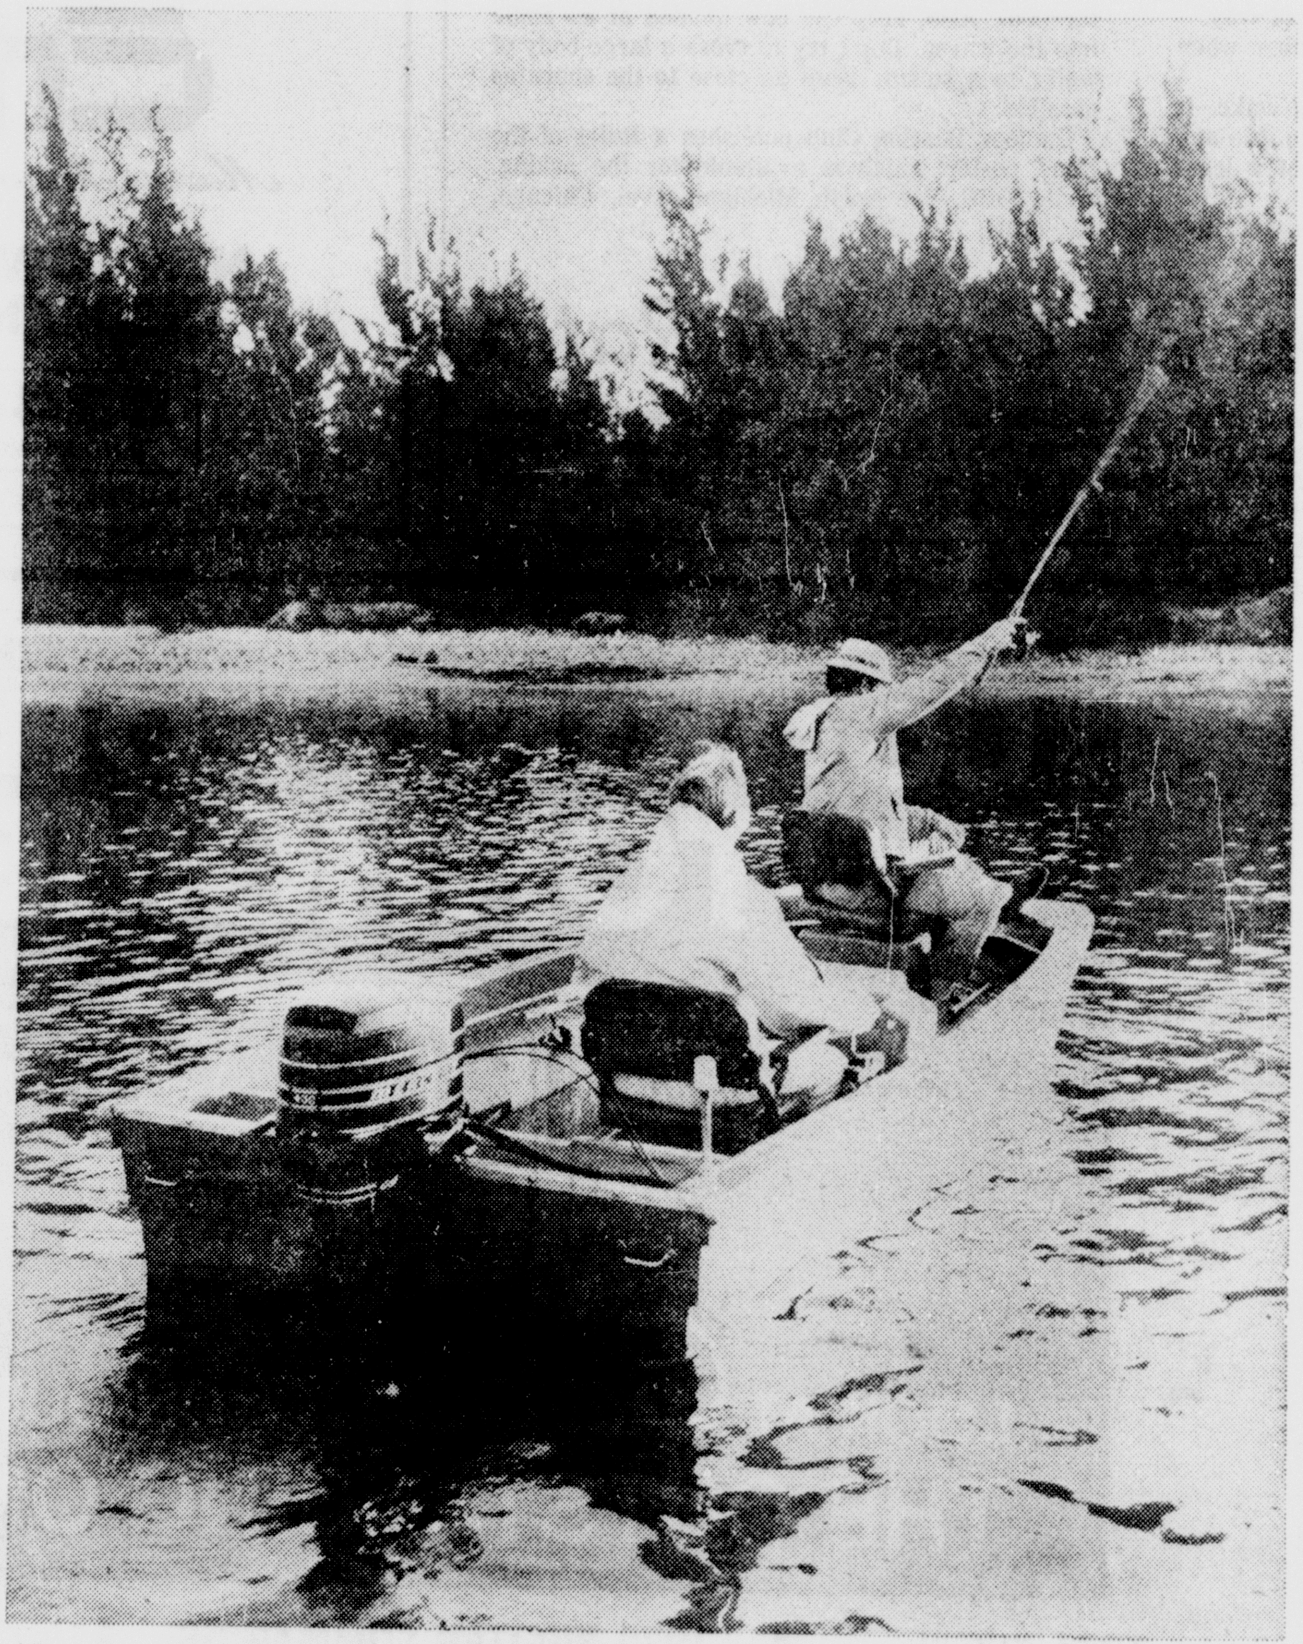
The basic course was revised recently to put more emphasis on outboard boating and trailering and to reach the growing number of boatmen who operate on inland rivers and lakes.

"We even changed the name from 'Piloting Course' to 'Boating Course,'" Cosdon said. "We felt that the word piloting was a little misleading. People didn't know whether it was for airplanes, or what."

Cosdon said there were too many things in the previous course that were of little interest to many neophyte boatmen.

"We streamlined our course considerably," he said. "We took out a lot of extraneous matter — chart plotting, compass work, things like that — to bring it down to the basic fundamentals which fit any type of boater.

"In other words, it's an all-purpose program and then to that we have added material for boat trailering, including even care and use of the trailer itself."



THE NEWEST THING in fishing boats is a model commonly referred to as a "bass boat." The two swivel seats provide plenty of room for anglers and the low freeboard makes it easy to boat the catch, be it bass or some other species. Surveys show that fishing is a prime reason for the acquisition of boats, and a sport in which the entire family often participates with relaxing effects.

Family Fun Of Fishing

Fishing is great family fun.

Everyone, from adult to the smallest youngster who can hold a rod or cane pole, can get in on the action and enjoy wholesome outdoor sport. And children, esepcially, like to fish for this is one form of recreation where they can be individuals, participating on the same level as adults.

But hat about the family that hasn't yet discovered the enjoyment angling offers? How can they learn about fishing, and the types of equipment best suited to their desires?

TO BEGIN, IT'S best to obtain some help. This can be from a friend who fishes, or it can be in the form of books, fishing interest magazines, and pamphlets available from fishing tackle manufacturers. Most established firms publish materials to aid the novice angler; simply write and ask for help.

The next step is to go fishing, and the Mercury outboard angling experts suggest that careful consideration be given to this important move. If you choose a place and time when fishing is poor, it's possible to end the family's interest at once. Uncomfortable weather and insects that get more bites than you do spoil the fun.

Plan the first fishing trip for a time when prospects are good (ask local anglers) and the weather is agreeable.

OBTAIN SIMPLE fishing tackle initially, and learn what types of gear you like the best. With experience you'll find that one or two methods of angling suit you best, and then is the time to buy quality tackle.

Vary your family's fishing experiences. Visit lakes and streams; try fly fishing, bait casting and spinning. Experiment with other methods such as limb-lining and trot lines. Seine some bait and spend a night angling for catfish.

A good way to keep fishing interest high during winter is to make your own lures and rods. Kits are available from a number of sources, and this is an excellent way to add to your knowledge of the sport.

Grease The Channels

If you must dip the back end of your trailer in salt water when launching your boat, coat the channels with a light grease.

It's Insurance Review Time

Fitting out time for pleasure boat owners is here, making it an appropriate time to review insurance policies, especially if any changes have been made in a boat, its equipment or the way in which it will be operated.

This advice comes from Robert Lowry, manager of the Hull and Liability Department of Marine Office-Appleton & Cox Corp., who notes that only about one boat owner in 10 takes the trouble to update his policy.

"The nine who don't," he says, "may later regret the oversight."

Many owners, he says, acquire expensive equipment during the winter —depth finders, ship-to-shore radios, direction finders, etc. — install it on their boat in the spring but make no adjustments in the policies to cover the new equipment.

"They stand the risk of being out-of-pocket should their boat become a total or constructive total loss," he said.

Lowry also suggests that boat owners review their liability coverage.

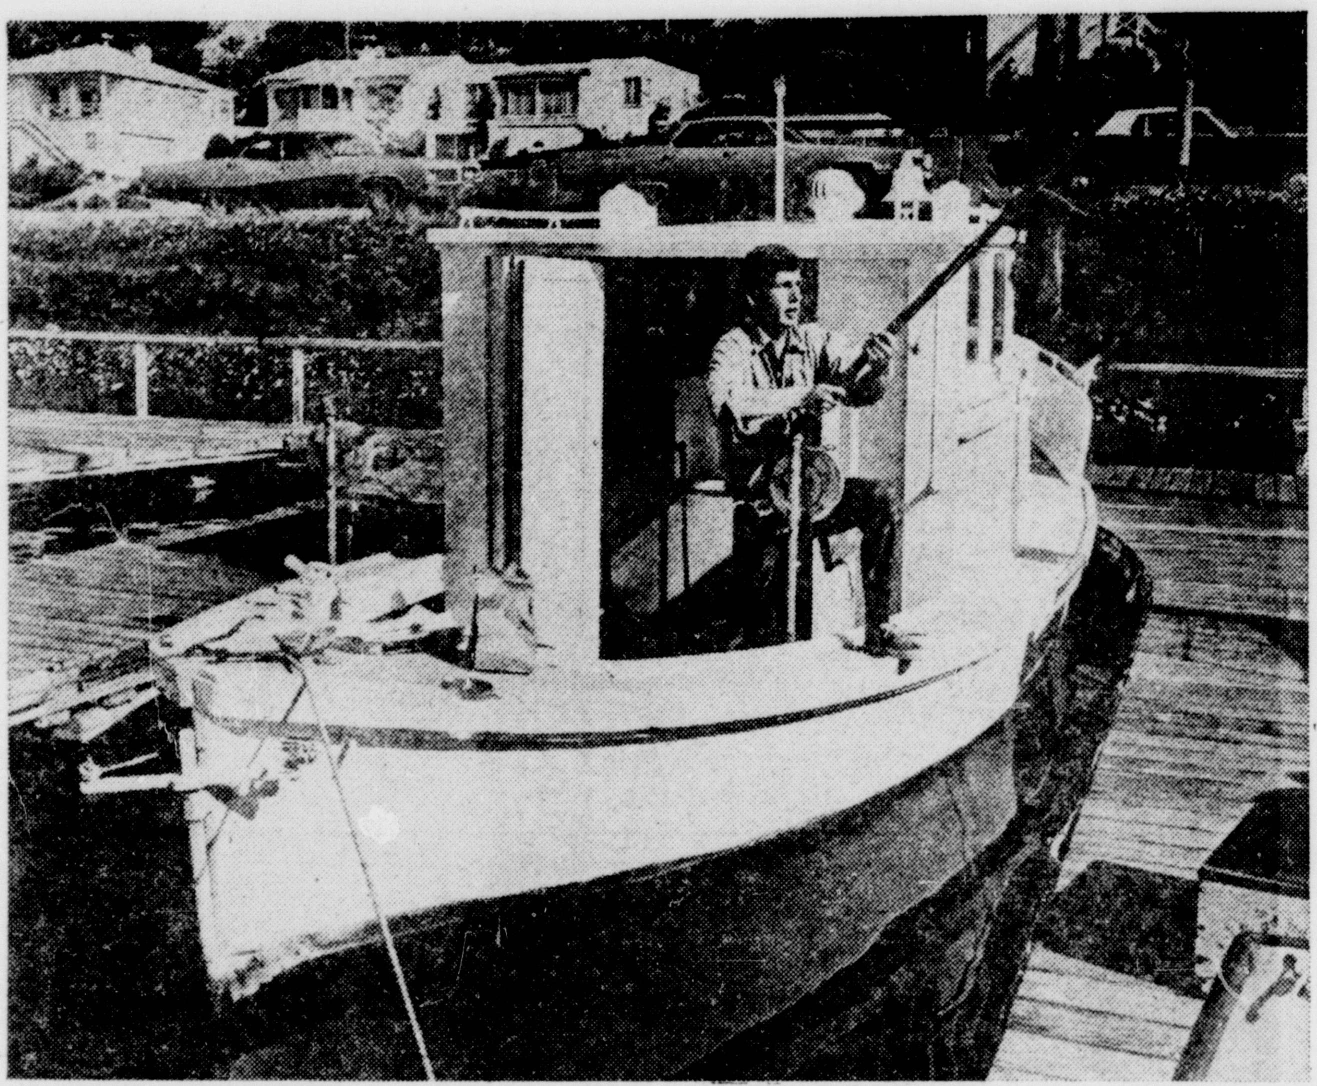
GETTING READY

With the official opening of the 1972 yachting season on San Francisco Bay getting ever nearer, Independent-Journal photographer Jim Kean took his cameras out on a Saturday to explore the Marin shoreline to record the preparations.

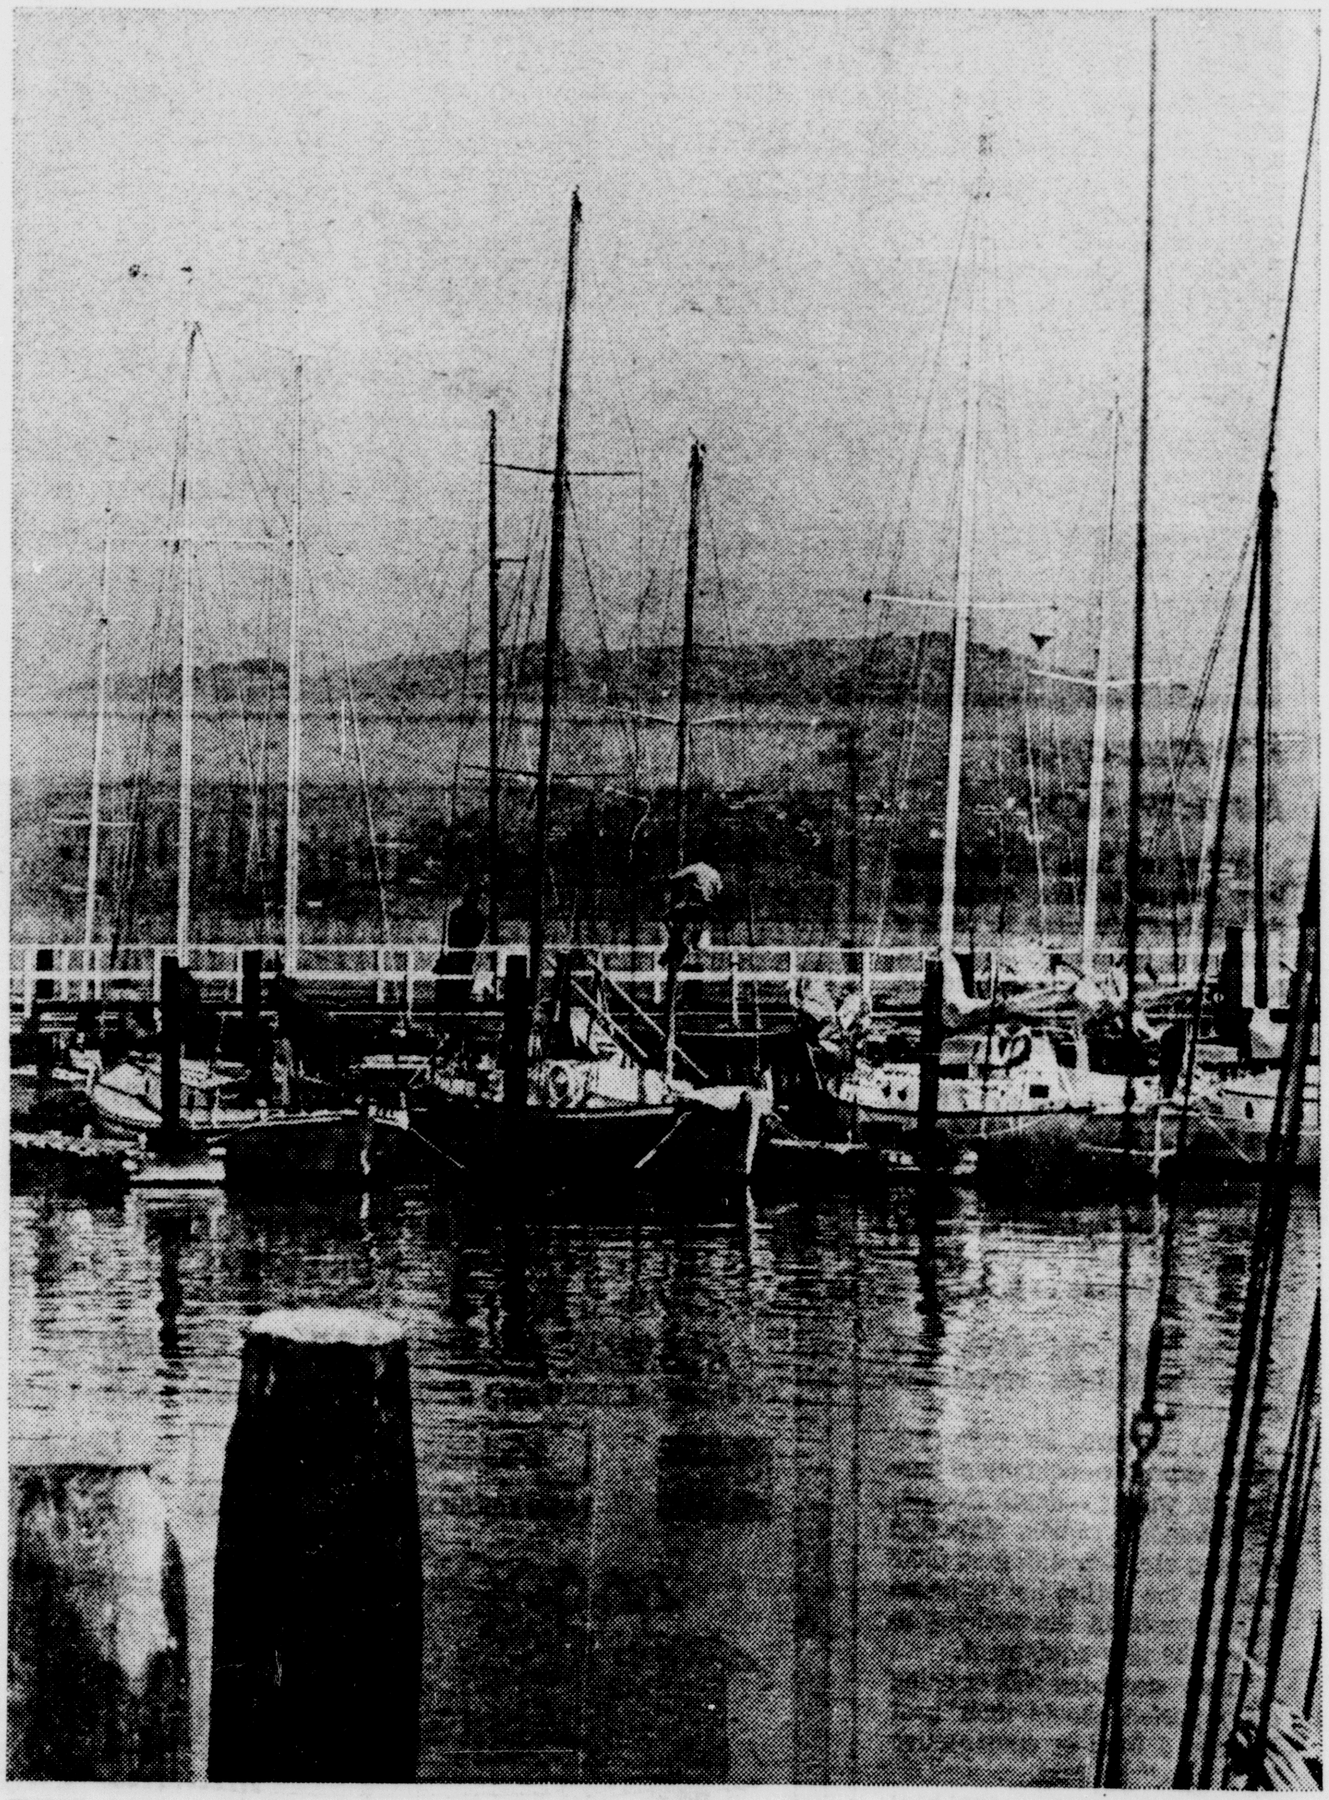
What he found makes up a portfolio of photographs on this and the following pages.

You see some boatowners and craftsmen at work repairing and polishing their craft. You see some boat harbors still quiet and silent. You see some skippers already enjoying the boating, too eager to await the official start of the season.

After tomorrow — opening day — there will be few quiet harbors. Most of the preparatory work will be over. And there will be many, many more boats sailing or powering through the waters of the Bay.



AT LOWRIE'S Yacht Harbor in San Rafael, Ted Davis was at work on the Sharon 1, a 28-foot Monterey hull fishing boat being restored there so that she can once again become a member of the fleet plying the waters of San Francisco Bay.



THERE WAS ACTIVITY, too, on the Sausalito waterfront where one workman had climbed a mast to carry out his chores while carrying on a conversation with a friend watching his efforts from the pier.

It's Foolish Not To Carry Equipment

Going boating without the proper equipment isn't just foolish — it's also against the law.

The Committee for National Safe Boating Week points out that on federal waters, there must be a life-saving device for everyone aboard a pleasure craft. Craft up to 16 feet operated on federal waters must carry proper lights and a fire extinguisher, if of closed construction; craft from 16 to 26 feet long must carry in addition a hand whistle or horn audible for at least one-half mile.

Larger pleasure craft, up to 65 feet long, require a hand or power operated whistle audible at least one-mile, and a bell.

Other items of equipment aren't required, but commonsense dictates that you carry them: Anchor, line, paddle, first aid kit, flashlight, fenders, tool kit, extra can of fuel, compass and distress flares.

Latest Boating Act Allots Funds

The Boat Safety Act of 1971 is the latest significant step in more than 30 years of effort to curtail tragedy among the nation's pleasure boatmen.

The first successful step was the Motor Boat Act of 1940 which set out the minimum requirements for safety equipment aboard small craft. It was followed by the Federal Boating Act of 1958 which introduced numbering for small craft and established the groundwork for improved reporting of boating accidents.

WHILE STATISTICS show that about 1,350 persons have died in small boat accidents during each of the last five years, industry sources point out that the number of recreational boats in use in that period rose from an estimated 8,865,000 in 1965 to 8,814,000 last year.

One of the key provisions of the 1971 federal legislation is authorization for dollars appropriation of 51.1 million dollars over the next five years, of which 37.5 million dollars would go to states to help them draft and carry out their own boat safety laws and safety programs.

This one provision of the law alone is expected to have a significant effect in curtailing boating accidents

OTHER KEY sections of the 1971 legislation call for:

Federal construction and performance standards for boats and associated equipment. The Coast Guard will set the standards after analyzing accident statistics to determine possible areas of hazard. Manufacturers and, to a lesser extent, dealers will be required to certify that their products are built and assembled in compliance with the standards. The bill contains penalty provisions for failure to comply and make proper certification.

Notification by the manufacturer of any defect in a boat. The notification must be made to the first purchaser and to any subsequent purchaser listed on the warranty and to the dealer who sold the boat. Copies of the notification must be sent to the Department of Transportation.

Registration of all motorboats, regardless of horsepower. The 1958 law required states to register at least all motorboats over 10 horsepower. Some states registered all motorcraft, some cut off levels below 10 horsepower. Purpose of the new provision is to bring all motorboats under the regulations for safety equipment and accident reporting.

Granting authority to Coast Guard boarding officers to take immediate steps to remedy such hazards as insufficient lifesaving devices, overloading or lack of fire-fighting devices. The officer may even direct the boat operator to return to his mooring until the problem is corrected.

New federal guidelines to assure uniformity of state boating laws .

Included are 25 pages of maps, plus detailed information on some 900 boating facilities on significant California waters.

WHENEVER a boat is on the water, the life jackets, as well as other safety gear, should be on board. But in the case of children, it is wise to go one step further. Have the youngster wear a life jacket at all times while on the water. Never let him be without its protection, and it may some day prevent a tragic accident. Here, at left, cautious and prudent mother not only insists that her child don a life jacket, but also makes certain that its straps are securely tied.

Tips For Buying A Fiberglass Boat

By STAN DAVIES

Do you know what to look for in buying a fiberglass boat to be sure of getting your money's worth?

From the letters I have received I feel that many would-be boat buyers are quite dazzled and bewildered by those gleaming plastic hulls.

First . . . all the materials which go into a fiberglass or reinforced plastic boat (whatever you want to call them) are in many respects similar. The glass fiber is made by only a couple of firms and each product is very similar. A dozen or so chemical firms which supply the plastic bonding material, polyester resin, are in furious competition, but their polyesters are practically the same.

SINCE THE raw materials of plastic boats are so similar the only real differences can be in design and workmanship. Apart from the design which includes such things as shape, length, beam, flare, sheer, etc., plastic boats fall into two classes of construction.

One type employs a combination of non-woven glass fibers in its two forms . . . chopped or mat . . . together with woven glass fabric. The other type uses non-woven materials only.

Remember, a reinforced plastic boat is much like reinforced concrete. The glass fibers are like the reinforcing steel rods, but it is the polyester resin which is the cement . . . the actual building material of the boat.

MOST TYPES of construction give satisfactory results when properly made, but there are some basic differences in the finished product. Boats which use the woven material as part of the reinforcing frequently have the familiar basket weave pattern in the laminate. They are definitely stronger for equal thickness than the ones using non-woven materials only.

Now before you buy, these are some of the things to check: Sloppy workmanship, rough edges which could cut your hands in an emergency, unfastened parts, scratches, patches and repairs.

HERE ARE a few questions I have been asked by people who have wondered about reinforced plastic boats:

Q. There is a strong aromatic odor under the forward deck of my fiberglass boat. What is it?

A. This is likely an indication that the resin is not cured or hardened properly. However, time will probably take care of it and if the weakness does not show up in some other way, don't worry about it.

Q. I was looking at a boat in a showroom and some areas in the hull seem to have different light reflecting qualities. A faint pattern showed in some places. What does that mean?

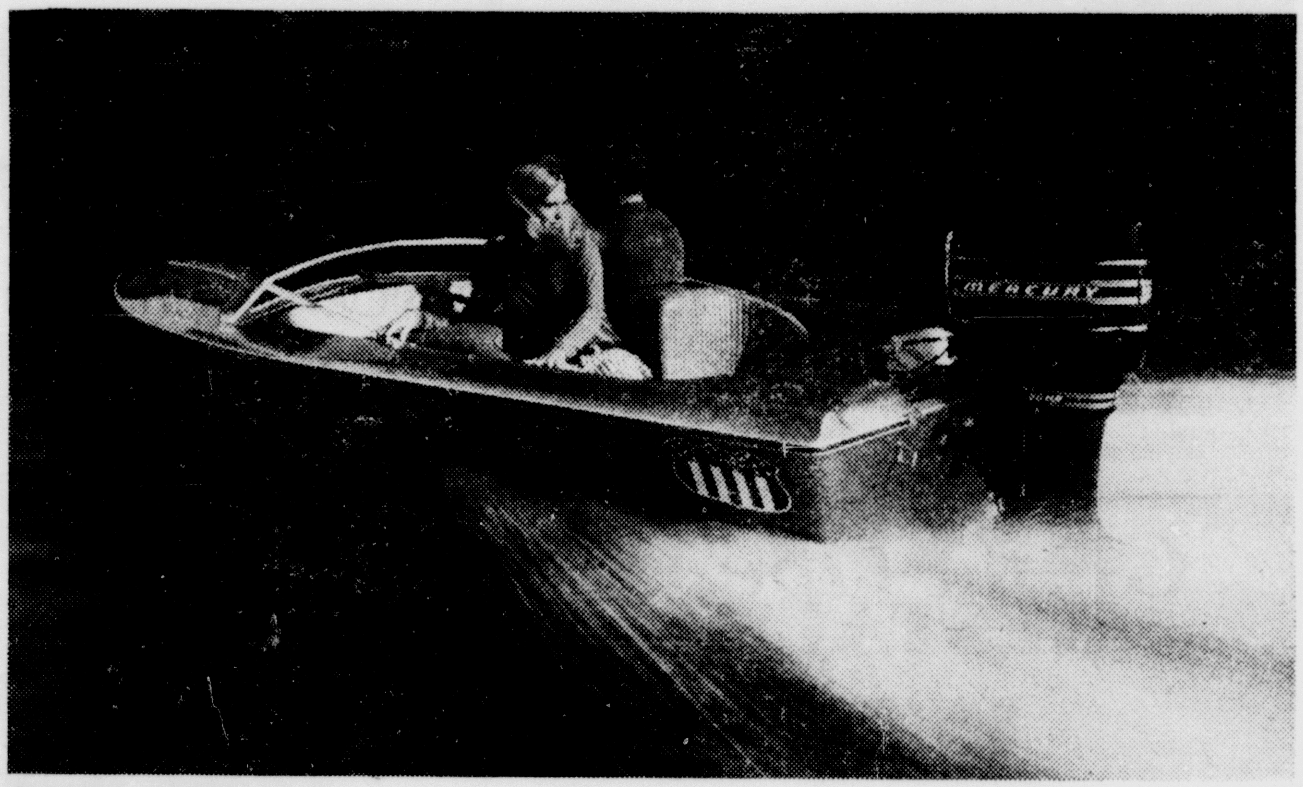
A. It could mean that the pattern of the fiberglass mat is showing through the gel coat merely indicating a sloppy job. On the other hand, it could mean that there are areas in the hull where the ratio of glass particles to resin is off. Resin-starved areas are usually weak spots. Be sure to have an expert to look at it before you buy this boat.

Q. I am thinking of buying a new plastic boat and there appears to be no bracing in it. Should there be?

A. Perhaps the bracing is molded right into the hull. Curves for instance provide their own bracing. The most important area to check is the transom. Is it solid? In large boats there should be knees between transom and keel. However, in smaller boats the bracing is often merely a thickening of the fiberglass and resin material where the transom joins the sides and bottom. Feel it yourself and see if you can twist or turn the transom.

Q. How do you fasten a cleat or other piece of hardware to a slick fiberglass hull?

A. There are two ways. You can drill holes and use through bolts with a hardwood backing block. Or you can laminate the cleat mounted on a small block right into the hull itself with fiberglass cloth and resin.



SLEEKY, SPORTY runabouts like this 15-foot fiberglass model dominated the boating scene in 1971, are back strong in 1972. It combines style with speed, and borrows strongly from the popular California ski boats.

Float Plan Is Wise Precaution

Planning a long cruise for the day, week, or longer?

The Coast Guard urges the boatman who plans to be on the water for any long period to file a "float plan," just like a pilot preparing for a cross-country flight files a flight plan with the Federal Aviation Administration.

All that's involved in filing such a float plan is to give someone ashore a schedule of the events planned for the cruise, telling when and where the trip will start, the approximate route, and the time and place of return. If the boatman fails to return within a reasonable time after his planned return, the person holding the float plan can notify authorities and a search can be started.

The complete float plan recommended by the Coast Guard includes the following information:

Name and phone number of person reporting.

Description of the boat, including color and registration number.

Survival equipment on board such as life jackets, signals, food, water.

Radio type and frequencies.

Trip schedule, including departure time, place of departure, destination, and estimated time of arrival.

If the skipper changes his plans, he should notify the person with whom he left the float plan, so that a needless alarm isn't sounded.

Needed: More Boating Ramps

The continued growth of boating, especially in boats that can be trailered and launched away from home port, is creating a demand for launching ramps, both public and private.

Back in the early 1950s, the big shortage was in marinas. This was met by a concerted effort on the part of the National Assn. of Engine and Boat Manufacturers to promote the design and construction of waterfront basins and facilities. In the 20 years since then, marinas have sprouted throughout the country, some of them capable of berthing up to 2,000 or 3,000 boats.

Launching ramps are simple to build compared to the complicated work that must go into a marina. A typical double ramp needs only about 50 feet of waterfront.

Boat Safety In State Is Improved

There were totals of 118 fatalities and 694 accidents, of which 396 were results of collision.

The summary indicates that the main cause of boating mishaps was human error. Equipment failure and hazardous sea conditions contributed a smaller share.

The type of accident responsible for the highest loss of life, 57, was boat capsizing. Collisions killed 13 and injured another 87. Most of the 233 collisions were directly related to boat operators ignoring the right of way, failing to maintain a proper lookout, or traveling too fast for existing conditions.

Director John Bennett said that total fatalities had increased by only one over 1970. "When the increase of 44,000 boats in 1971 is compared with an increase of only one fatality, we must view this as an improvement in the overall safety picture. Hwever, no one should be satisfied until these figures decline substantially."

Bennett also noted that total property damage was down by $811,886.

Boating Grows

More than 44,900,000 people went boating in 1971, according to the Outboard Boating Club.

Take Care Of That New Boat

Upon taking delivery of a new boat, the typical male finds himself experiencing the same gamut of emotions he does on the arrival of a new car — excitement, pride, nervousness, apprehension.

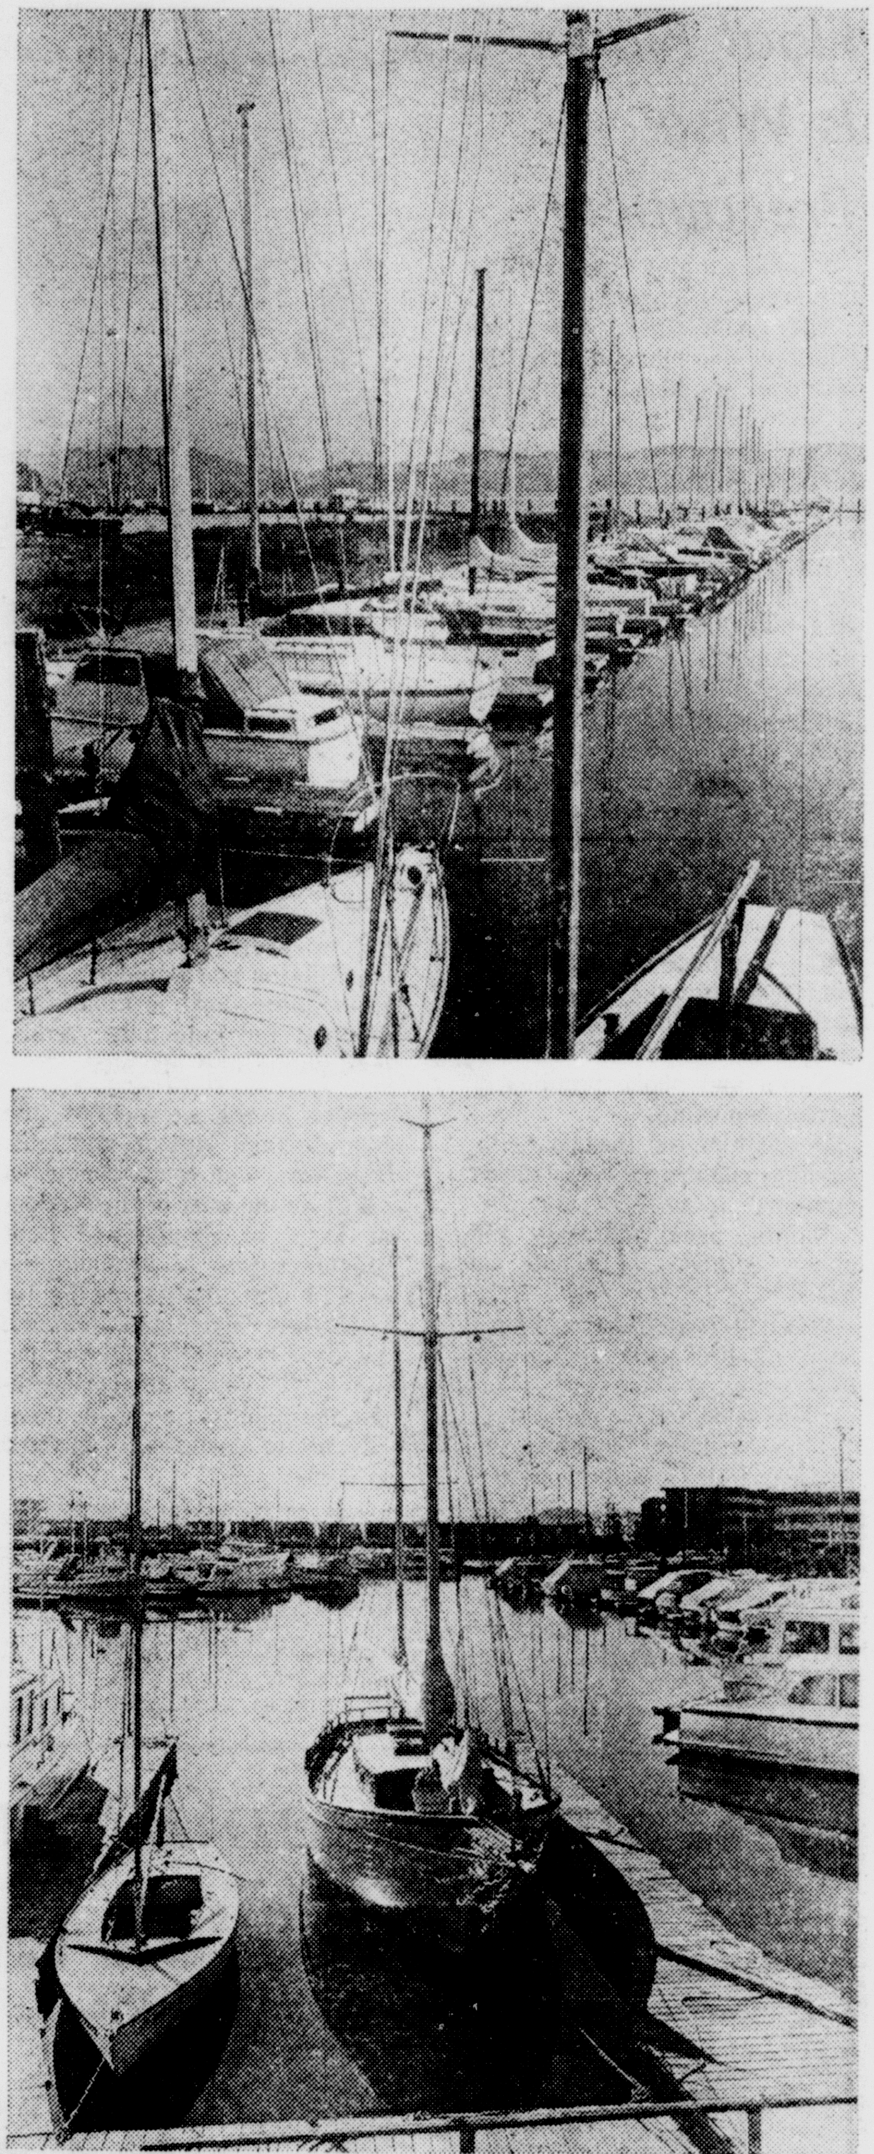
He's happy to have it but isn't too sure of what needs to be done.

Here are some useful tips from the boating experts at Mercury outboards on how to care for a new fiberglass boat when it becomes a member of the family:

Fiberglass "cures" somewhat as does concrete. It becomes hard enough to touch and handle rather quickly, but the final stages of curing taper off slowly over a period of months. By the time a new boat reaches its owner it will have been out of the mold long enough for the curing process to be well along. However, it is well to know that if a relatively new fiberglass boat is subjected to an unusual strain for a period of several days to several weeks, it is apt to be still just "soft" enough to take a gradual set that is apt to be hard to take out.

This means, for example, that a small open fiberglass boat should not be turned over and leaned against a wall with its weight on one gunwale. If this is done the gunwale may take a permanent set. Similarly, trailer support rollers should be carefully adjusted for straight, true and uniform contact with the bottom of the hull of a fiberglass outboard or stern drive runabout.

If the boat will be moored in dirty water or left at its mooring all season, a thorough waxing of the fiberglass is the best thing to protect the surface from discoloration and fading.



ON A PRE-SEASON weekend, Independent-Journal photographer Jim Kean found a quiet at some Marin yacht harbors that will be missing tomorrow and for the remainder of the busy boating season. At top is Basin 3 of Sausalito's Clipper Yacht Harbor, with all serene. In bottom photo is the Lowrie Yacht Harbor in San Rafael, encircled with apartments, and quiet before the day's activities erupted as boatmen began appearing to ready their craft for the new season.

Boating Is For All The Family

ONE OF THE NICEST things about boating as a recreation is that it is an activity in which the entire family can take part — in preparations as well as the actual cruising. Above, at Anderson's Boatyard in Sausalito, Dolores Righetti of San Francisco works at painting the bottom of the 25-foot cabin cruiser, the Cara Lee, belonging to her son, Bob Righetti, who was also on the scene, lower left, and working. Boating, its advocates point out, is a sport that can be enjoyed by all ages, and even the small child can be assigned a role in the tidying of the boat. (Independent-Journal photo by Jim Kean)

Boating Should Be Fun For Kids

Boating can be as much fun for your youngsters as it is for their parents, but a little common sense and planning will make the trip even more enjoyable for all hands.

The two most important things to remember about children and boating, according to the Outboard Boating Club of America, are:

A BOAT doesn't have enough room for youngsters to run around in so parents must be creative in coming up with different sit-down activities and games to occupy their time.

Let the youngsters know that boating is fun but don't force any of them into your own activities. If you're out for fish and they don't want to hold onto fishing poles, don't force them. They'll be more agreeable and you'll save wear and tear on your nerves.

Before you go out, and during your boating trip, teach your children the common sense rules of boating. Be sure to explain each rule — children are more receptive to instructions if they know the "why." (Outdoor Boating Club publishes a "Rules of the Road" poster which is available free for hanging in the youngster's room or aboard the boat. Write OBC, 401 North Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill., 60611.)

WS 1274 EF
Lund

EVEN THE YOUNGEST member of the crew isn't too young to benefit from — and enjoy — some instruction of boatmanship while on outings. An explanation of the charts being used to plot the course will make the entire family feel that they are all truly a part of the activities. There are opportunities, too, for instruction in the meaning of navigational aids, in hazards along the way, and in the fundamentals of safe boating.

IF YOU'VE ever made a game of learning road signs while traveling by car, you can do the same aboard the boat. Make a game of learning the various buoys or markers in the water. Or have them keep track of how many boats of different shapes and sizes they see. This activity should keep the children content for a while.

If the child is old enough, put him to work! He can probably do routine chores, such as stowing gear. Children also serve as a lookout for floating debris, other boats and channel markers. And they usually are eager to help in coiling lines, taking in fenders, etc.

When it's time to paint or polish your boat, let the youngsters help. If they see you working on the boat, as well as enjoying boating, they'll get a better picture of the sport and develop a sense of responsibility toward their craft — an important factor in developing future seamen.

EATING ON BOARD the boat can be fun, if you remember to keep the menu simple. These couples have brought along chicken, fresh fruit, a packaged dessert and canned drinks for their lunch, and use paper plates and plastic forks to make the clean-up easy.

Picnics Part Of Boating Fun

Do you often get hungry or thirsty when out on your small boat?

Well, it's no surprise since the combination of the outdoor air, the water and a little bit of sunshine usually lead to a bigger and better appetite.

The Evinrude News Service suggests you plan on having a meal on board during your next outing, but it should be kept simple. A serving of cold cuts, salads and fruit, kept fresh in aluminum foil or plastic container, is the best bet to keeping the meal and entire outing enjoyable.

AS FOR DRINKS, iced tea and fruit juices make ideal hot weather beverages. With these drinks in a portable cooler, they can be kept chilled during even the hottest of days.

Breads, cakes and cookies may be placed in the coolers also, but only after they have been placed in a watertight container. Be sure to keep these foods away from the sun. Storage under the gunwale or in any shaded area is the best bet.

As for the meal itself, place it on a card table if your boat has an open cockpit with ample space. You'll probably find it advisable to seek a protected cove or sheltered anchorage when you're about to eat. In addition, unless the boat is anchored down, it will remain in constant motion, and little stability could be achieved.

A second anchor, this one tied from the stern, will keep the boat from swinging in the wind or current.

COOKOUTS ON board are highly discouraged because of the fire hazard. If cooking is necessary, however, take a few simple precautions. Place the cooker as far away from the engine compartment as possible, and keep the immediate area clean. Be equally careful with stored gasoline.

Cookouts are ideal, though, for shore picnics. A simple meal with food to grill will probably please the family.

Equipment such as a portable grill, charcoal, blankets, and paper cups, plates and eating utensils can be easily transported aboard your boat and brought ashore.

Whether eating on board or ashore, be certain to leave the area clean when you're finished. Don't be a litterbug. Put your refuse in bags or boxes and properly dispose of them.

Scandinavia Caters To Young Americans

The Travel Pages

The five countries of Scandinavia (Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden), diverse in several ways, are as one in welcoming the young traveler from America.

Though some European countries are cool toward the wearers of long hair and blue jeans, this is not true of Scandinavia, which is youth-oriented and looks with tolerance upon ephemeral fashions. This point of view may even bring practical dividends, for "the swinging youth of today becomes the staid tourist of tomorrow."

THANKS TO new fares available from airlines serving Scandinavia, it is possible in 1972 to cover all the Viking lands at a very modest cost. In addition, the Scandinavian countries offer the young traveler special considerations in accommodations, domestic transportation and recreation. Also there are opportunities for stimulating experiences in the cultural, artistic and educational fields.

Young visitors will find that language is no major barrier in "meeting the people and seeing their way of life" — for many Scandinavians speak English.

Youth hostels in Scandinavia are among the best in Europe. Most are under strict government supervision, with the emphasis on comfort and cleanliness. Costs are modest — a night's lodging can come to as little as 75 cents, with meals comparably priced.

Other types of inexpensive accommodations include approved camping sites (most offer cooking and food shopping facilities) as well as moderately-priced boarding houses, pensions, tourist lodges and guesthouses.

Traveling within the various countries is facilitated by low and in many instances special fares on planes, trains, buses and boats.

However, to young people everywhere, bicycling and hiking have not lost their universal appeal, and such leisurely trips through the Scandinavian countryside are very popular.

THERE ARE a wealth of recreational and cultural activities available to the young visitor. Because of its varied landscape, scenic Scandinavia provides a wide variety of land and water sports, including glacier skiing in summer.

Culturally, there are many national and local festivals, music from jazz to classical, theater, ballet, opera, folk dancing, and one must not forget the famous Scandinavian arts and crafts.

BICYCLES PLAY a major role in transportation in Scandinavia, and visiting young Americans have learned to take full advantage of the bike lanes and paths that sometimes follow the main highways and that sometimes take off through the scenic countryside.

CITY LIFE IN Scandinavia has its attractions for youthful Americans, too. Pubs patterned after the British, but with a Nordic flavor all their own, are popular gathering spots for the younger crowds, and often offer top-grade jazz music.

THE BALINESE TOOTH-FILER HAS NOTHING TO DO WITH DENTISTRY

THE EXOTIC RITUALS and customs of the peoples never fail to fascinate the western visitor to Indonesia. But if you are one of those who cringes at the mere thought of a visit to your dentist, the ritual performed by Ida Baus Okatlaga of Bali is one you might prefer to skip. Ida Bagus Okatlaga is a tooth-filer. Not a puller or filler of teeth, but a filer. His work has nothing to do with dentistry. He is a Brahman, a temple priest of Bali's Hindu religion. In his village of Pemetjutan or in nearby communities, some 50 times a year, as one of the puberty ceremonies, he holds tooth-filing rituals. Working with one small flat file, one miniature triangular file, a tiny cleansing hammer and a dab of analgesic unguent, he files a small portion of the upper teeth of young boys and girls. The purpose: To diminish evil, by filing away the less attractive qualities of human nature. A side result: The even white smiles for such Balinese are famous.

Cost Is Up, But Travel Is Still A Bargain

By MURRAY J. BROWN

The American tourist will generally have to pay slightly more than last year because of the devaluation of tha U.S. dollar but travel abroad can still be a bargain.

So says a man who should know — Stephen S. Halsey, senior vice president and general manager of the travel division of American Express.

"Dollar devaluation makes it a bit more expensive to travel outside the United States," he said, "but on the basis of what the dollar still buys overseas compared to what it buys here, the average American still has the best of it."

Halsey said that the loss in the purchasing power of the dollar "while it fluctuates from country to country, is still fairly modest."

AS AN EXAMPLE, he cited the British pound. Before the international monetary crisis last year, the pound was pegged at about $2.40. Now Americans are paying about $2.60, or roughly 8.5 per cent more.

"Generally, however, an American can buy more in Britain for a pound than he can in the United States for his $2.60," Halsey said. "To compound our advantage, American wage scales make the $2.60 — or the pound — easier to come by."

He said the same holds true in other countries whose currencies have been revalued in relation to the dollar, such as France, West Germany, Japan among others.

As for getting there, Halsey noted that major international airlines had agreed to substantial fare reductions on the trans-Atlantic routes in 1972 before the currency crisis.

"But the effects of dollar devaluation are wiping out many of the intended savings," he said. "To compensate, the International Air Transport Association has agreed to a 3 to 7 per cent increase on the new ticket prices, depending on destination."

AS A RESULT, he said, Americans will end up paying about the same — or slightly more — than last year for most round trip tickets. There are some exceptions, he noted, including most 22-to-45 day "excursions." For instance, you can fly New York-London roundtrip for $313, or about $19 less than last summer.

A seasoned traveler himself, Halsey considers bargain hunting to be part of the fun of the game. Here are some suggestions he passed along:

Consider visiting countries where the dollar devaluation has had little or no effects on travel costs. Austria, Greece, Portugal, Spain and Yugoslavia are among countries still rated as "good buys" by travel professionals. Also Mexico and much of South America where the dollar's value has not changed.

Remember that hotel accommodations, transportation, etc. usually cost less and are more readily available in the so-called off-season months. For example, Paris in the spring, London in the fall, the Caribbean in the summer, and Scandinavia in the winter.

Check on packaged tours. Wholesale and retail tour operators offer thousands of economical all-inclusive package deals for groups and individual travelers designed to fit most travel budgets.

In connection with packaged tours, Halsey said, American Express, will hold the line on previously-published 1972 prices for the land portions even though they are based on the pre-devalued dollar. Air fares will have to comply with IATA schedules.

"THIS YEAR'S tours were planned early in 1971 and bulk contracts for hotel space, local sightseeing, restaurants and other features were drawn in 1971 before the dollar devaluation," he said. "But American Express has always held to published prices which means we will stick to prices shown in our Europe tours book for 1972."

Some major operators and hotel chains already are passing along the difference.

A Little Place In Acapulco

A couple of years back, if you wanted to fulfill that dream of owning a little place by the sea in Acapulco, you had to acquire it through a series of legal subterfuges that cost almost as much as the property itself.

This was because the Mexican Constitution stated: "No foreigner can directly own real estate within 100 kilometers from the borders and 50 kilometers from the coasts." Since Acapulco is the only seaside resort in the world that can guarantee 360 days of perfect weather and sunshine every year, thousands of Americans and Canadians persisted through the massive legal red tape to acquire their own little piece of "Paradise."

BUT SINCE mid-1971 Mexico has made it simple and legal for you to buy a lot, a villa or a condominium apartment, and you will receive title almost as if you were a Mexican citizen. The purpose in liberalizing the law was to attract more foreign capital to accelerate the industrial and tourist development of Mexico and already the results are beginnng to show. Real estate offices, such as the one in the Acapulco Hilton Hotel, are booming with American and Canadians with checks in hand to buy property . . . especially income properties such as efficiency apartments in the new condominium "Apart-hotels" which the owner can occupy free when he wants to vacation in Acapulco and are maintained and rented for him at all other times.

Two examples are the El Matador Hotel & Racquet Club which recently opened and the new International Turtle Club, under construction. Both of these properties are designed to operate as hotels when the owners are not in residence with a unique design that makes each hotel type room an efficiency apartment with its own kitchenette, patio, bath and private entrance.

THE NEW LAW of ownership for foreigners is in the form of a bank administered trust which, like most property trusts, require renewal every 30 years.

The 30-year renewal clause might discourage some, but most investors, it is claimed, will want to renew their trust even earlier to avoid inheritance taxes, while others will want to sell and take their profit long before the trust would need renewing.

How Fair Are The Media To Nixon And His Administration?

PRESIDENT NIXON AND THE PRESS by James Keogh; Funk and Wagnalls, 204 pages, $6.95. Reviewed by Bryce W. Anderson.

James Keogh is a longtime writer and editor for the Omaha World-Herald and Time magazine, who became special assistant to President Richard M. Nixon in 1971. In "President Nixon and the Press," he writes with a bias acquired in the latter position; but he attacks tellingly an opposite bias held by many in the news media.

Keogh puts the "adversary position" of government and press in some historical perspective. But he cites chapter and verse to show that"the obsession with the negative" by the latter has become greater during the Nixon administhation.

This results, claims Keogh, from overwhelming "liberal-left" orientation of those writing and handling the news, plus an intrusion of slanted comment into news columns and onto news programs that is a throwback to the "personal journalism" of a century ago. "The inflexibility of their own outlook blinded many journalists to the prospect that there would be a high degree of initiative, open-mindedness and flexibility in the Nixon administration," he contends — and marshals evidence to support this contention.

Keogh is more scholarly, better informed and a much better writer than John R. Coyne Jr., whose book on Spiro Agnew and the "liberal-left", "The Impudent Snobs," appeared a few weeks ago. Together, the two volumes may be taken as evidence that the "middle of the road" is starting to talk back.

Certainly there has been enough published from the left, and the middle is entitled to its inning. Keogh scores for it. There are many in the business of news writing and gathering who believe largely as he does about elements among their fellowcraftsmen, even if not about Richard Nixon.

YEARS BEFORE HE ascended to the presidency, Richard M. Nixon had his most famous run-in with the press. In November, 1962, in Beverly Hills, angry and dejected over his defeat by Edmund G. Brown in the election for governor of California, he clenched his fist and set his jaw as he delivered his "you won't have Nixon to kick around anymore" attack upon newspaper coverage of his campaign. As President he has continued to be at odds at times with segments of the media.

Snow's Young Rebels

THE MALCONTENTS by C. P. Snow; Scribner's, 277 pages, $6.95. Reviewed by Alice Dalbey.

C. P. Snow's new novel — his first since completion of the "Strangers and Brothers" series — is about the young, rebellious, socially-conscious intelligentsia of Great Britain.

By and large, Snow's youthful graduate students — they call themselves "The Group" — are believable. Their excuses for violence are as old as revolution and, of course, the end always justifies the means.

But the most sympathetic, convincing characters are not the students. Rather, they are their patient, protective, long-suffering parents.

Snow is an old hand at keeping a secret and his suspense is carefully plotted. Will the students' plan to destroy the reputation of a public figure succeed? Or will they be exposed and prosecuted for having obtained evidence illegally?

But the suspense comes a cropper via suicide — or is it murder? — and the great scheme is sidetracked. What results is lenghty introspection and debate about loyalty, guilt, honor and the nature of betrayal.

This is a thoughtful, though wordy, novel about a contemporary problem. It should be of intense interest to parents of brilliant young adults.

SOME NEW BOOKS FOR THE JUNIORS

If there are children in the home, there is also a plethora of milk and juice cartons that ultimately find their way into the trash can.

Clever Betsy Pflug suggests in her "Pint-Size Fun" (Lippincott, $3.95) that instead of discarding the cartons, you put them to use as the raw materials for some creative and easy craft projects for the small ones in the family.

It is the fun way to recycle, and from the empty cartons can come such accomplishments as a mobile spider, a motorboat for the bathtub, a whole menagerie of animals, a model town with streets and houses, likewise a farm, Indian beadwork and kaleidoscope. Carton sculpting and wax printing molds receive special attention.

Miss Pflug is very good at this sort of thing, as she proved with her earlier craft books for children — "Boxed-In Doll Houses," "You Can" and "Funny Bags." But this time she has outdone herself with some really ingenious ideas that imaginative children are certain to use as a taking-off point for some projects and designs they will conceive for themselves. "Pint-Size Fun" is a sure pleaser for kids and tykes with nimble fingers and busy minds.

THE BALLAD about the old farmer MacDonald and his possessions, brought over from England to the Appalachian backwoods in the early 1800s, has delighted Americans for generations. With its huge and diverse cast, it also presents a book illustrator with a wonderful opportunity to cut loose his creative talents. Robert Quackenbush does just that with colorful artwork pitched at the lower age levels in his version of "Old MacDonald Had a Farm" (Lippincott, $4.95).

Quackenbush has stressed realism over humor, but manages to work a good measure of both into his pictures. And along with the catchy words and the engaging illustrations, there is also the music to the song for those children who prefer singing to reading. A good fun romp with whatto many children will be an old friend.

FOR GENERATIONS now cat and mice have been entertaining children with their antics — remember the old Tom and Jerry cartoons? Usually the combination meant a battle of wits and a chase, with the mouse outdoing his larger foe. Author Kathy Mandry, however, in "The Cat & the Mouse & the Mouse & the Cat" (Pantheon, $4.50) has concocted a more original tale of a cat and mouse who become pals instead of enemies, and of the problems of the former when they are separated temporarily. Unfortunately this gentle little story for pre-school and early grade boys and girls suffers somewhat from Joe Toro's illustrations which, we suspect, do not match up with most children's ideas of what cats and mice, even fictional ones, look like.

The talented Marin team of writer Edith Thacher Hurd and artist Clement Hurd have collaborated on another book featuring their popular character Johnny Lion. This time it is "Johnny Lion's Rubber Boots" (Harper, $2.50) and it tells the story of one rainy day in the life of our young hero. Time hangs heavily for Johnny when he is forced to remain indoors, but Father Lion comes to the rescue with a pair of red rubber boots that enable his son to again join in the adventures out-of-doors. As with all Hurd books, it is a well-told and nicely-illustrated story. And the $2.50 price is a pleasant surprise in this day and age.

Animal families are well established as characters in children's fiction. Rabbits, bears, piglets, etc. But donkeys, you will have to admit, are a change. Edith Holden Cooke in her "The Bratchets" (Holt, Rine-hart and Winston, $4.95) never comes right out and says that is what her principals are. But illustrator Lansing C. Holden's pictures, complete with long ears and tails, give them away. There are seven Bratchets in all, counting the parents, and they are an active, sometimes naughty, bunch. Their antics will keep small ones, again the 4 to 8-year range, well entertained and giggling right up to the last page — "the tail end of the Bratchets."

The Shame Of Newark

NO CAUSE FOR INDICTMENT by Ron Porambo; Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 398 pages, $8.95. Reviewed by Frank Farrara.

The civic corruption, the race riots, the teachers' strike in Newark, N.J., have made news across the U.S. in recent years, but outside the immediate area interest died when headlines faded.

Porambo, a newspaper reporter, recounts a fuller story after four years of work, and it is worse than even the darkest headlines.

Rampant racism, police corruption, official criminality, and just about every conceivable ill that could befall a city is exposed.

The title is derived from the fact that 23 persons were killed in the 1967 race riot, 21 of them black, and no punitive action was taken against police, who Porambo contends killed wantonly.

Particularly gripping are his interviews with black residents who recounted the murder of other blacks.

Former mayor Hugh Addonizio was found guilty of extortion and imprisoned, and six of the city's seven councilmen were indicted with him, but Newark has a long way to go.

Maybe we have a haughty exterior, but test our interior for prices and ideas, on draperies, carpets, etc.

Middle America, Region Of Our Roots, Treated Warmly

By DON KEOWN

A STREETFUL OF PEOPLE by Winston M. Estes; Lippincott, 276 pages, $5.95.

Millions of Californians trace their ancestral, if not their personal roots, back to the American Southwest or Midwest, from whence came their families in quest of gold, a gentler climate, orange groves, Hollywood fame, aerospace jobs or any or many of the other attractions this state dangled before them.

Thus there exists in most of us an affinity for those regions to the east, and especially for those days when our fathers or grandfathers still worked the farms, ran the stores and taught the schools on the plains of Texas, the prairies of Kansas and Iowa or in the hills of Arkansas and Missouri.

These are the places, the period and the people about which Winston M. Estes writes.

He wrote about them first in "Another Part of the House," sensitively and humorously, and the Chicago Sun-Times praised it as "a fine book — warm and real and funny" and The New Yorkers said, "The stream of life runs true from the beginning of the book to its end."

He writes about them again in "A Streetful of People," and the earlier descriptions still apply.

Specifically, Estes' stories are about one town in Texas, in whose dusty panhandle he grew up, and about the Depression years of the 1930s of his boyhood. But those who spent those same years in any small Southwestern or Midwestern town, or who have listened while parents or grandparents told stories about such times and palces, will have no difficulty identifying with Estes' characters and incidents.

Very familiar will be the alcoholically inclined local judge who decides to over-imbibe on the very day he is scheduled to serve as official greeter to the visiting governor. So, too, the harried chairman of the San Jacinto Day Parade, although in your town the occasion may have been Decoration Day, the Fourth of July or the county fair. And the self-anointed town cultural leader with the long suffering husband. The ritual of the Rotary Club meeting. The battle of wits between bill collector and the town deadbeats.

Then there is the shapely schoolteacher the whole town suspects of spending her summer dancing in the "girlie" show at the Dallas Fair — although the accusation can't be proved. A really hilarious account is that of the flabby high school lad, a future state road commissioner, who on a bet broke the monotony of the Depression years by circling the block in his BVDs.

Perhaps our personal favorite is the story of rural mail carrier Ben Hodges and his trauma on retirement day, reminding us of our own rural mail carrier father in Kansas who postponed his retirement as long as possible, and whose proudest possession at his death was the watch presented to him by the patrons on his route.

Like so many of us, Winston Estes, a retired Air Force officer, no longer lives in the region where he grew up. He resides now in Virginia. But it is plain that the Southwest still has first call upon him as a native son. For while what he writes is very, very funny, it is also compassionate and understanding, more appreciative of the special character of these towns and these people than it is satirical.

That is important, for there is an ugly tendency on the part of too many who have left Middle America to relocate upon one of its coasts to look back at their old homes with disdain or condescension. There is no justification for such snobbery. True, while the small towns of the Midwest and Southwest have in some cases changed very little in the four decades that have passed since the events of "A Streetful of People" supposedly took place, and while there is still unlikely to be found there the cultural advantages and sophistication of the big cities and the eastern and Pacific suburbs, this means simply that life there is different — not necessarily inferior.

A couple of years back we were sitting on the half-century-old porch swing at our parents' home in the southwestern Kansas town where they had lived virtually their entire lives, and which had gained nothing in population in all that time, and we were aware vaguely of something strange and unsettling. Sudenly we realized what it was: We had been seated there in the twilight for 10 or 15 minutes without hearing a single obtrusive sound other than some birds twittering — no automobile horns, no trucks backfiring, no planes overhead, not even the seemingly omnipresent power mowers. It was the kind of peace and silence one could find in few other places in America today. And as we looked around us, the air was clear and unpolluted. Small wonder the neighbor woman across the street, seemingly already elderly when we were growing up, was soon to celebrate her 100th birthday in good health.

Winston Estes is aware that, while many of us were lured away from these towns by the restlessness that is a part of America, those who chose to remain and settle for less in the way of material things have not really been shortchanged. They have certain advantages, including an orderly pace in life, that are at least as valuable as symphony concerts and shopping centers. Recognition of this is as much a part of Estes' delightful book as its depiction of the distinctive flavor and character of these communities and their inhabitants.

DREAM interpretation is likely to supplant dieting as the favorite subject of authors of self-improvement books.

The latest in the field is "How to Interpret Your Own Dreams (In One Minute or Less" by Thomas Chetwynd, published by Perer H. Wyden Inc. of 750 Third Ave., New York.

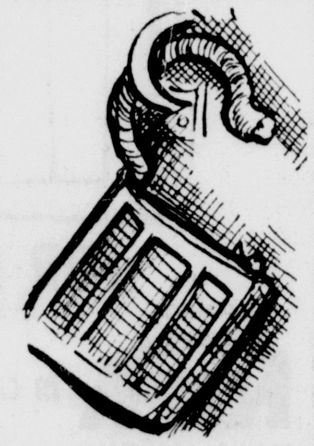
Chetwynd includes an encyclopedic dictionary of dream symbols and subjects and their meaning — a baby can mean "the birth of new potentialities within the individual" or conversely "bondage to childishness," a cripple "fear of impotence."

This is precisely what other authors of other books in the field have insisted cannot be done with any authenticity. Dreams, they say, are too personal an affair with the dreamer for such impersonal applications. What means one thing for one dreamer means something quite different for another. And that seems to make good sense. Still, the Chatwynd dictionary is fun on the parlor or games or astrology level.

FAWCETT HAS published as a $1.25 paperback the "Official Major League Baseball Record Book" with statistics through the 1972 season.

Sleuths & Suspense

A REPORT FROM GROUP 17 by Robert C. O'Brien; Atheneum, 210 pages, $5.95. Reviewed by Don Keown.



Robert C. O'Brien blends elements of the suspense novel, the spy thriller and the science fiction genre to produce this entertaining and rather chilling piece.

Along the Potomac outside Washington D.C. on a Russian-owned estate that is off-limits to the U.S. government, a former German Nazi scientist is at work perfecting what is suspected to be weapons of biological warfare. A concerned Uncle Sam asks civilian virologist Fergus O'Neil to look into the matter — unofficially and covertly.

O'Neil soon learns that Dr. Helmuth Schutz is engaged in sinister experimentation that goes far beyond that with which his Russian masters are acquainted. He believes, too, that the disappearance of a young neighborhood girl is connected with the ex-Nazi's work.

As with Russians, the use of Nazi war criminals as villains in this kind of fiction is reaching a point of over-exploitation. And O' Brien's plot moves so rapidly that he never really has the time to etch in his characters. They remain one-dimensional. But those are only two quarrels with what is undeniably a generally well-done, attention-holding novel. And O'Brien uses his personal knowledge of microbiology and genetics with excellent effect.

The Glad—'Ego Builder'

It doesn't matter who coined the phrase to describe Gladiolus: it's true.

They are "ego builders." Not only because they are so easy to grow, but because of the wide range of colors — and the many landscape situations in which Glads excel.

It's true that Gladiolus are among the easiest-to-grow garden choices. They rate as a top flower bulb in America and the brilliance of color and beauty of form helped establish Gladiolus as a favorite cut flower.

Though Gladiolus have been popular for decades, a recent wave of increased popluarity has been generated by the new hybrid varieties introjuced by dedicated plantsmen, who spend years to develop such dazzling Glads.

Among today's hybrid Gladiolus are varieties which grow five-to-six feet tall. They produce 20 or more perfectly formed florets; some measure five inches across.

THE COLOR range to be found among the hybrid Glads is unbelievable. There are varie-ties which will produce blooms in almost every color imaginable — including shades of blue, purple, violet and green, which are not commonly found in the flower kingdom.

In addition to separate colors, there are multi-colored varieties which contain combinations of two, three, or four colors in each floret.

Part of the ego-building connotation surrounding the growing of Gladiolus is that you can plant Glads in the garden in favorite colors -- and can select hues which will match the indoor decorations when the spikes are cut for arrangements in the home. Such pride of accomplishment is hard to describe, but easy to relish and enjoy.

THERE ARE low-growing tiny Tot Glads, to highlight garden borders; myriad other choices, in varying heights, for summer accents in the landscape.

Some Californians started planting Glads a few months ago, and are beginning to enjoy the blooming results and will continue to do so — if they followed-up with subsequent plantings every few weeks.

HYBRID GLADS are called "ego-builders" for a good reason. They are easy to grow, and come in a wide range of colors that permit you to select hues to match your indoor decorations in fashioning lovely floral arrangements with their sculptured beauty.

The Adventures Of One Turf Farmer

By FRANK J. TAYLOR

In my scheme, the lawns on either side of our view-window living room are more than patches of grass on which to snooze or play croquet on a sunny day.

They're summer-time extensions of the dining and living rooms.

They're air conditioners and also outdoor rocking-chair gathering places. Even more, they're micro-farms from which I harvest fragrant crops every time the grass is clipped.

An expert lawn-master would probably rate ours as the most neglected lawns in the neighborhood because the turf is a hodgepodge of grasses, clover, dichondra and even vetches, the one groundcover tough enough to survive in the Bermuda grass that invaded the sunny third of the front lawn.

"Why don't you plow up the mess, sterilize the soil and start over again?" a lawn expert asked recently.

BUT I'M NOT about to follow his suggestion. What with three showers a week guaranteed by our make-your-own-rain system and monthly feedings of lawn food, the turf stays green and cool and springy underfoot and it yields a weekly crop.

That's where the turf farming concept comes in. The grasses and clover lap up the plant food I spread. Much of the nutrient finds its way into the mower bags of clippings. We spread this as mulch around roses, shrubs, fruit trees and vegetables. It works down into the soil.

That's about the easiest way I can think of, off hand, to turn fertilizer pellets into organic plant food. Let the turf do the work.

Some years back when we first became turf farmers we irrigated the lawns by dragging hoses around and moving sprinklers from spot to spot. Somehow there were always dry areas the sprinklers didn't cover. It was a messy, time-consuming chore.

One day after The Watering Committee had wasted half a day dragging hoses around (while I was loafing at the office) she asked sarcastically: "When is your scientific daydreaming going to come up with a better watering brainstorm?" The message came through clear and strong.

AFTER PICKING up several hundred feet of second-hand pipe, I cut and threaded and hooked up lengths, screwed sprinkler heads into the Ts, and turned on the water. Homemade rain fell on every inch of the lawns. But the pipe was still on top of the grass instead of under it. Burying that pipe beneath the sod was anything but lazy gardening. But it was onetime toil that liberated us from repetitive toil.

So in the long run it was indolent gardening.

The nemesis to turf farming is the brown spot that shows up almost overnight. The first impulse is to soak the brown spot, but grass experts tell me, "That's exactly the wrong thing to do; either lawn moth weevils are chewing the grass roots, or fungus is making the grass sick, and both thrive on more water."

Sometimes in the evening I see tiny moths hopping on the grass around the brown spot. Where there are moths, there must be weevils from which they hatch. Loading the hose turf-gun with dibrom, I dunk the brown spot and the grass around it.

IF THE GRASS doesn't green up in a few days. I know it's fungus trouble, which calls for another medicine, a lawn disease control.

In the warm summer months I husband our turf farm like the tomato patch or the tuberous begonias. In every square foot of lawn there are scores of plants crowding each other for space and food. They can starve in a hurry. What a healthy turf needs most of all, I've learned from the turf farming adventure, is an ample and regular mealtime.

A CHECKLIST FOR GARDENERS OF MARIN

✓Mother's Day isn't far off — May 14. Consider a gift plant in bloom. Or an indoor foliage plant.

✓All kinds of annuals can be transplanted from nursery flats. After they get a good start, pinch them back to encourage side branching and additional bloom.

✓Container-established Marguerites can be used to brighten drab spots in your garden. They like the sun.

House Plants Enjoy A Gentle Scrubbing

Better Homes and Gardens "House Plants" book offers tips for grooming your plants:

Does the foliage look dusty? Carry a soft, dampened cloth with you as you water the plants. Gently wipe the leaves, supporting each leaf as you dust it. And to keep your plant looking well-tended, remove any yellowing foliage.

If You Want To Keep Cool This Summer

Was last summer a little too hot for comfort? Did you swear that this year you would have air conditioning?

Before you make a move in any direction, heed a few words of advice from the National Better Heating-Cooling Council.

In the first place remember the maxim from your high school science class: heated air rises, cooled air falls. If you follow this slogan you'll be way ahead of the game.

Install all cooling outlets near the ceiling, and as the cool air falls to the floor, it will upread comfort all the way down. If you have a ducted heating system, don't try to combine it with cooling, the council warns. Unless the ducts were sized for cooling, the air won't get out fast enough to do much good.

Even if the ducts are large enough, as long as the heating outlets are near the floor, only your ankles will be cool during the summer.

If the cost of a separate overhead air conditioning system is prohibitive, the council suggests other alternatives. Add insulation, especially in the attic. It will keep the warm air out during the summer, and conversely, it will keep the heat inside during the winter.

Room air conditioners are another alternative to a central system. However, get units with good thermostatic controls, and let them run all day. Otherwise, it may take all night to get the temperature down to your comfort level.

An attic fan is a tried and proven way to cool off a hot house. By preventing a heat build-up, it keeps the house more comfortable. Coupled with added insulation, it can work wonders.

And finally, the council suggests you remember another science class slogan: light colors reflect heat, dark colors absorb heat. Install two-sided window shades in rooms facing the sun. Have the light side face outward. It will reflect the rays and heat of the sun.

About CARPETS

By Doug Emerson

LEVEL LOOP CARPETS are very much "in" . . . from commercial installations in your favorite stores and supermarkets to the most luxurious homes.

What is a "level loop" carpet? Well, it can be any carpet with looped rather than cut pile . . . but wide usage today refers to the low, dense level-loop carpets created for especially hard wear as well as moisture and stain-resistance.

Such carpets are often called indoor-outdoor carpeting, with olefin fibers being most popular. The olefin fibers have the great virtue of being completely non-absorbent. Kitchen spills are easily wiped up . . . and outdoor moisture won't affect the carpet.

The versatility of these carpets shouldn't make you think they belong only outdoors or in special rooms like kitchens. There is probably a perfect place for a durable level-loop carpet in some room of almost every home, especially very active rooms like dens, family and recreation rooms.

You'll find these exciting carpet developments in our big display, in beautiful new prints as well as striking colors. It's our business to bring you the best of today's carpets . . . and we'll even bring samples right to your home. Call now!

Do You Really Live In Your Living Room?

A showcase for family occasions and entertaining, the living room traditionally gets a choice view, windows to enjoy it, generous floor plan and a goodly chunk of the decorating budget.

But how much real living goes on there?

GOING UP, rather than out, is one way to satisfy the craving for a spacious, exciting living room within comfortable "people" proportions. Practical, too, when another room moves into a half loft above.

This triple-threat arrangement was well illustrated recently in a visit to a home where loft space was used for the master bedroom.

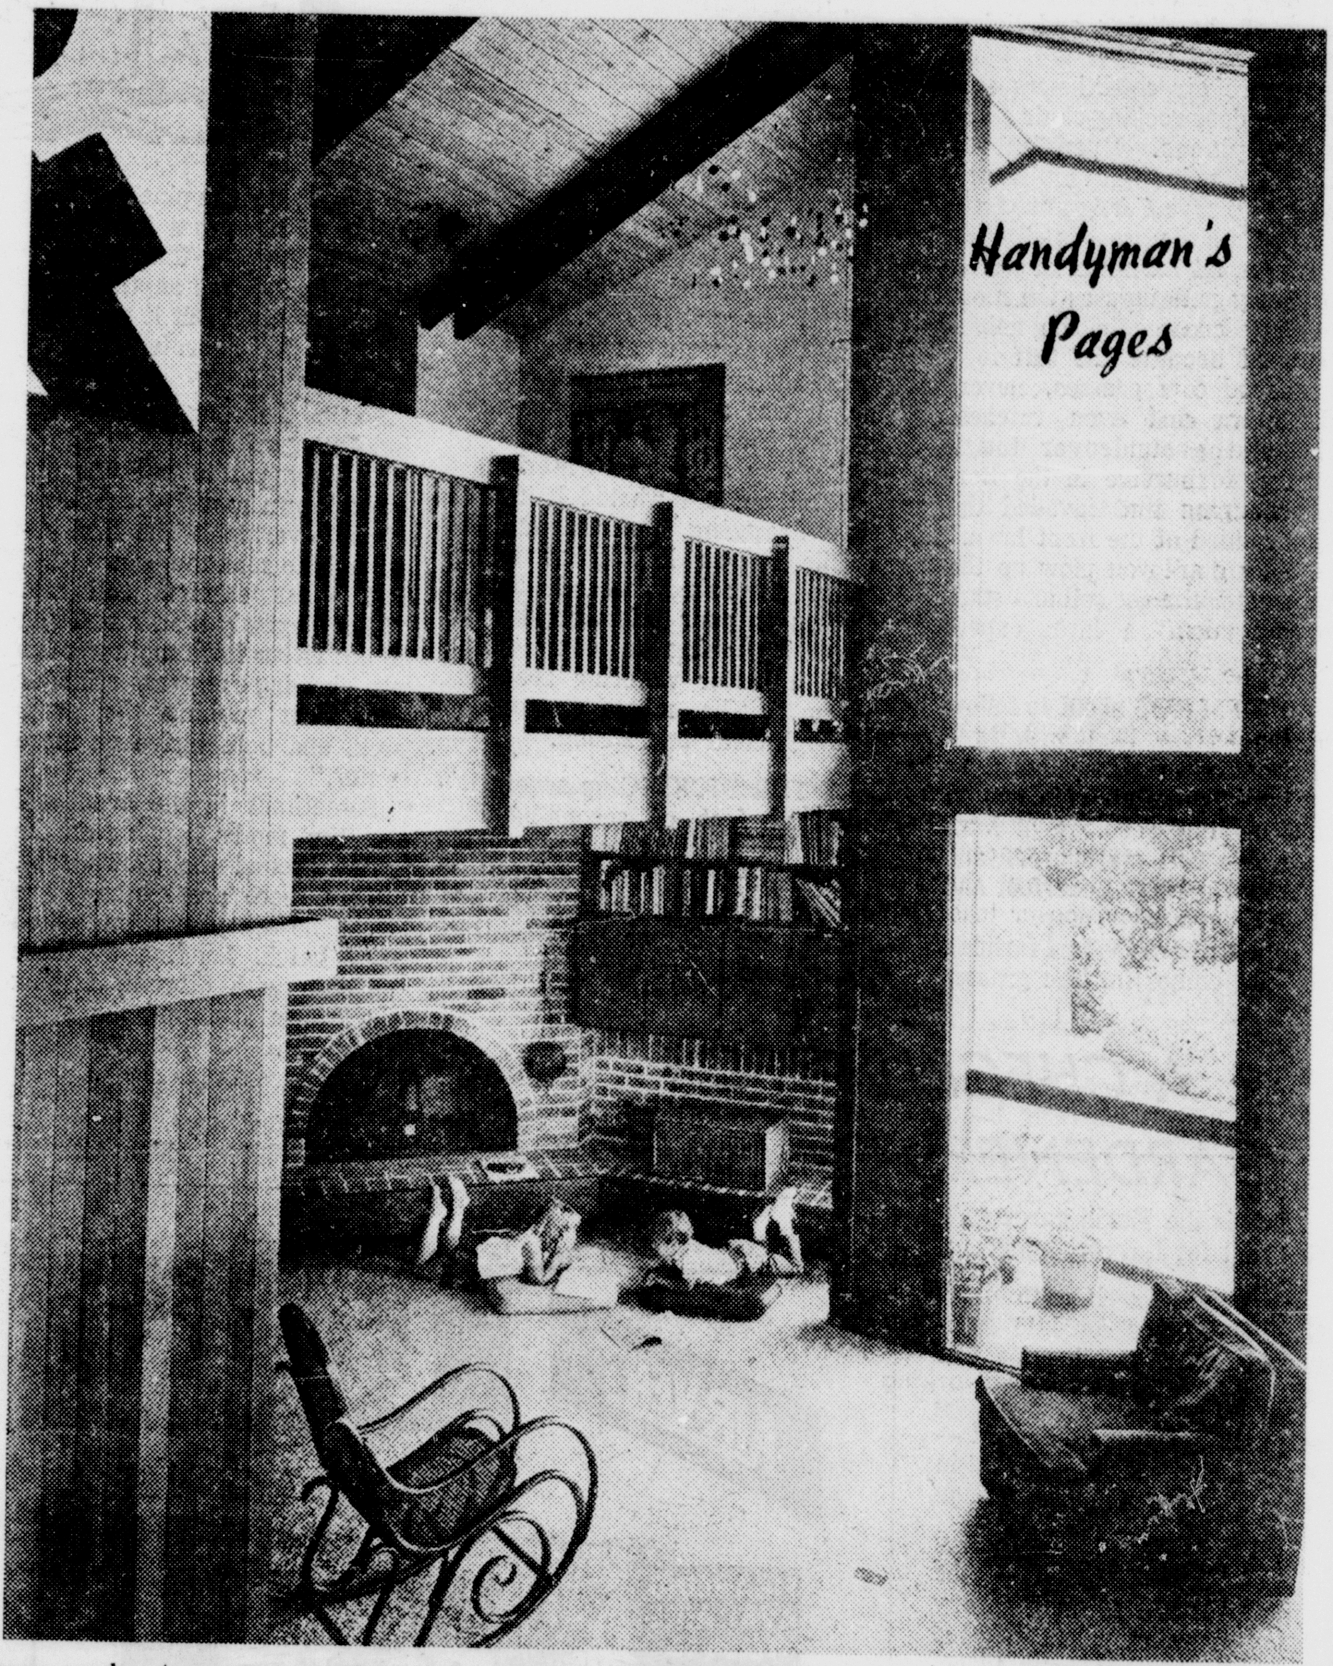
In the main living area, the soaring expanse of a two-story pitched, open beam ceiling is highlighted by flooding natural light from full-length windows. Dark-stained Douglas fir beams are paired under two-by-six inch white pine decking for a dramatic ceiling contrast.

WALLS OF warm-toned vertical grain resawn western wood combine beauty and practicality to set the stage for an active, easy-to-care-for room.

The master bedroom shares the airy, open outlook, with a balcony rail that obstructs neither light nor view. Top and bottom rails are sturdy three-by-sixes and two-by-fours respectively, and major verticals are three-by-fours with one-by-one inch infill.

A container garden on a shallow, sheltered deck outside the windows personalizes the view, and can be changed with the season.

WHERE THE ceiling drops, the mood changes. Below the balcony, the fireplace dominates its own nook, where a packed bookshelf invites a solitary reader to a seat on the hearth. Wall cabinets stow cards and games for companionable evenings or rainy afternoons by the fire.



WARMED BY THE fireplace and by the walls of resawn western wood, these children find the corner of this large living room under a bedroom loft a cozy nook. Paired two-by-six-inch beams stained dark, over two-by-six decking, add interest to the high ceiling. A railing extends the open feeling to the bedroom.

Student-Inspired Inside-The Home Ideas

Youth Solves Decorating Problems With Creativity

By CAROLYN S. MURRAY

After one month of working with some students from Woodbury College in Los Angeles, I feel inspired to get "with it" and do something creative around the house.

Watching these design interns paint a wall, whip up draperies, nail blemish-hiding cedar boards to a badly plastered wall surface or install a vinyl floor covering, one feels like Whistler's Mother, sitting and rocking away the precious hours!

The student designer comes up with fresh ideas while the rest of us settle for orthodox solutions to decorating problems.

IN SIX OUT of seven room settings designed by this particular group of young planners, good architectural interest was added to rooms bare of detail. In one case a raised platform, 18 inches high, became the floor for a fireplace grouping. And changing that third of the floor space into a slightly raised sitting area made a tremendous visual change in the otherwise dull room.

The student team chose a stock metal fireplace, covered the hearth in fake-brick tiles and carpeted the rest of the platform, stair treds and risers in deep shag. The steps became additional seating spaces for youngsters playing chess, watching television or toasting marshmallows.

THE OTHER portion of the room contained a tufted love seat and matching sofa for more conventional pursuits.

Designer Bill Lane has also used this raised platform treatment for the living room of a high-rise apartment. His theory is that the whole space, from wall to wall, floor to ceiling, should be used, especially when one must pay such astronomical rent for space in today's high-rise buildings.

ANOTHER IDEA that evolved out of the student project was the use of a picket fence material as a dado for a boy's room. Painted white and raised about eight inches above the floor molding, the fence added a perky touch to an otherwise plain wall.

Two other students converted a boxy room into an unusual octagonal form by creating wedge-shaped closets in each of the four corners of the room. Ready-made shutters, instead of doors, were used on two closets and artificial plants were placed behind and close to the shutters to emulate little gardens.

A SPOTLIGHT in each of these areas helped create the illusion of a real outdoor area in back of the shutters.

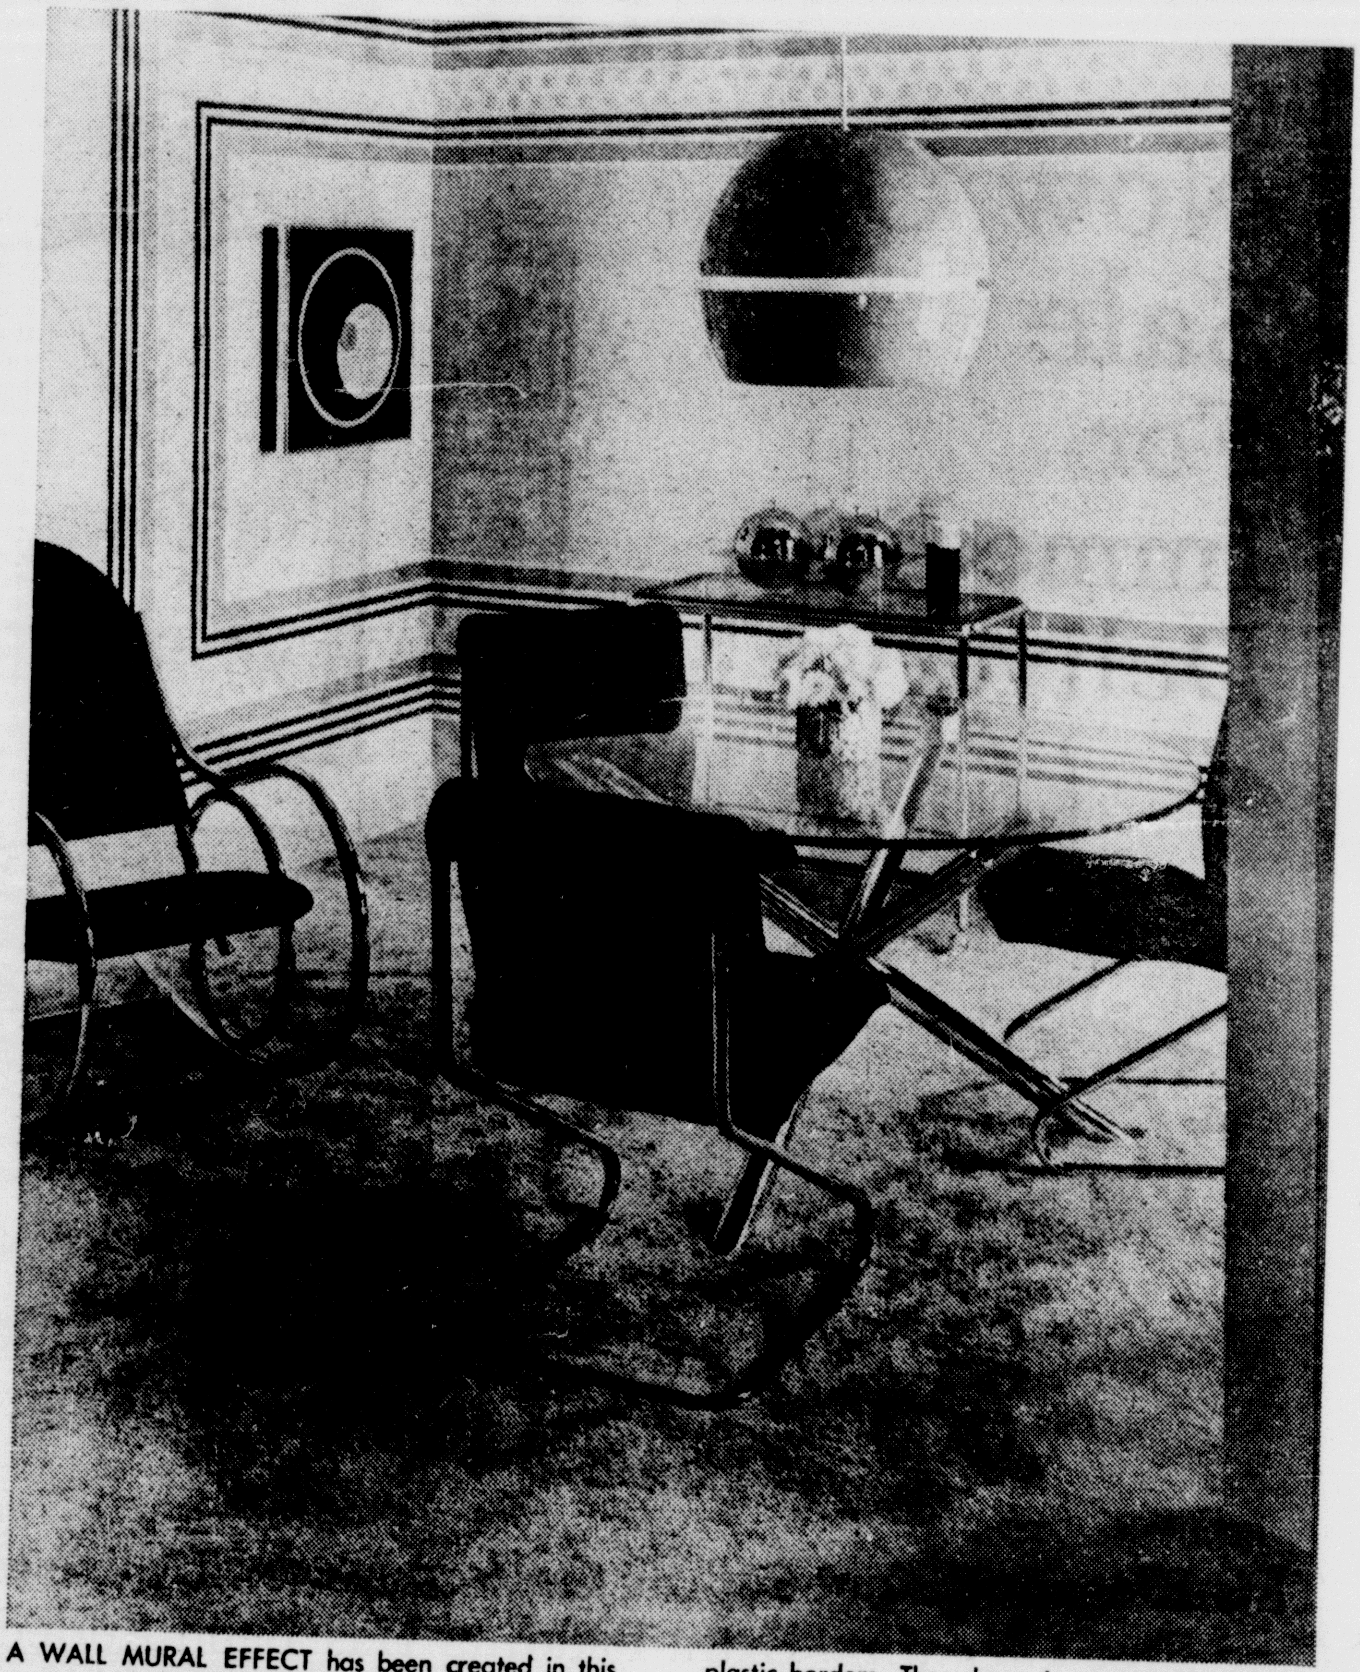
It's a pleasant change from the usual wall groupings of paintings and posters. The patterns are nicely compatible with the handsome floor covering which is a flame-stitch patterned carpet by Monarch made of Enkaloft nylon. It is a nice room for the mobile set as well as for stay-at-homers.



A WALL MURAL EFFECT has been created in this room through the use of colorful self-adhesive plastic borders. The scheme is a sunny yellow, red, black and chrome, as uncluttered as it is eye-catching.

IT'S SEW RIGHT FOR THE SEAMSTRESS

NO MATTER how compact and versatile your portable sewing machine, milady can still use a table that will support it and afford her ample working space. So Steve Ellingson has designed one. For $1 sent to Steve Ellingson, San Rafael Independent-Journal Pattern Department, Post Office Box 2383, Van Nuys, Calif., 91409, the home handyman can obtain Sewing Machine Pattern 347. The directions lead to a table that stretches out to a generous six feet by 20 inches top for working, but shrinks to a compact 20 by 22 inches when not in use. You cut a space out of the table top to fit your specific sewing machine. And by replacing the part that has been sawed out, you have a table that can double for dining or as a desk. There's storage space, too. Two slim cabinets hold thread and other supplies. And the simple project is built principally of inexpensive plywood. All parts are straight cuts, so elaborate tools are not required.

SOVIET UNION PARENTS HAVE TV WORRIES, TOO

By CHARLOTTE SAIKOWSKI

MOSCOW — Soviet children, too, are glued to the television set, and parents and pedagogues are worried.

It's not a concern about excessive blood and gore, however. Soviet television is tightly controlled by the state, and except for the steady diet of war films, Russians see little violence. Sex likewise is kept within chaste bounds.

But even though Soviet programs are saturated with educational and cultural themes, alarms are being sounded that television has a harmful influence on a child's upbringing, distracting him from his studies and group activities.

Soviet studies show that many youngsters have less interest in reading books and that television often interferes with their homework.

Among addicted children there is a growing tendency to watch sports events on television and to participate less in outdoor games with their peers. Such viewers also do fewer chores in the home and are reluctant to take part in Young Pioneer and Komsomol activities in the school.

These general findings are reported in a Pravda article by Valentin V. Ksenofontov, a senior researcher in the U.S.S.R. Academy of Pedagogical Sciences. The article suggests that television raises all sorts of problems and conflicts in Soviet families, 50 per cent of whom now own a TV set.

It also indicates that some Russians use television to keep their children off the streets and are not always satisfied with the quality of programs.

"I saved my money," the article quotes one mother as writing, "and bought a television set especially so that while I'm at work my son would not pointlessly chase a football outdoors all day —and with bad children at that —and would acquire some sense. But there are few programs for him and most of them are uninteresting."

Ksenofontov says that scholars have not yet thoroughly researched the effects f television. But the negative influences noted so far are due not so much to the content of programs (which nonetheless could be improved) as to the fact that children view TV indiscriminately.

Parents, he feels, are to blame for the lack of discipline on this question.

The pedagogue is against telling a child what programs he may and may not see, for this simply arouses opposition. Rather, he advises parents to plan television viewing along with a whole range of duties and activities in the home.

Since work is the prime duty of man, he argues, the child should be made to feel that his studies are important to the entire family. Similarly, he should participate in discussion of his parents' job problems so that there is mutual understanding.

"It is clear that when parents respect the work of their child, he will as a rule not be confronted with the dilemma of whether to study or to watch television," writes the author. "The most important thing will be his studies, his civic duty."

Ksenofontov also favors families working out together how they will divide their time as between household chores, public duties, and entertainment and posting monthly and weekly schedules. He also suggests they select programs that suit a child's interest and stimulate his creativity.

Such an approach, he concludes, will save children from "falling captive to the television set."

Remember When There Was Fun?

Remember when there used to be some fun on television — Jackie Gleason, Red Skelton, Art Carney, Jack Benny, Danny Kaye, Sid Caesar, Imogene Coca? Granted they may have worn out their welcomes, but where are the replacements? So far, there have been none.

Quick Comments On A Batch Of Fine New Columbia Classics

By JOHN SUNIER

A large batch of fine classics from Columbia compels us to comment only briefly on a few of them this week.

Albums are now being recorded to fit a title someone has dreamed up, in much the way some recent non-fiction books have come about. "Bach for Band" is the believe-it-or-not title of Columbia album M 31126 featuring The London Symphonic Band conducted by Gerallt Leslie Williams.

The title suggestion was followed in great earnestness, for these pieces are not the rather mouldy-sounding arrangements of Bach for symphonic band from years ago, but spanking new recreations for an ensemble of wind players. The sheer weight and richness of such works as the "Toccata and Fugue in D Minor" or "Sleepers Awake" must be heard to be believed.

A treat for the ears and a unique alternative to Bach-for-Moog, koto, jazz, and all the other recent transmutations.

IN THE AREA of fabulous sound is a new recording of that familiar old pair, Respighi's "Fountains of Rome" and "Pines of Rome," (Columbia M 30829). The great popularity of Eugene Ormandy's version of these Roman "wide-screen soundtracks" has made it possible for Columbia to record the pieces again in 1972-quality stereo, and the result is nothing less than smashing.

Another Ormandy Philadelphia Orchestra entry is Columbia M 31074 with Vaughan Williams' "Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis" and two Elgar works — "The Enigma Variations," and "Cockaigne Overture."

The third volume in Glenn Gould's series of the Mozart piano sonatas is Columbia M 31073, containing the sonatas numbers 8, 10, 12 and 13 in Gould's distinctive harpsichord-like treatments. The articulation is so clean it sounds scrubbed!

Chopin's beautiful "Preludes," all 24 of them, are played by Brazilian pianist Nelson Freire on Columbia M 30486. Freire broke into the concert scene only last year and is already one of the most exciting pianists in the world. Both he and the audio engineers have achieved truly lovely piano sound on the LP.

"Funeral March for a Papagallo and Other Grotesqueries of Alkan" is the title of Romantic-period specialist Raymond Lewenthal's album, M 30234. It comes with a bonus seven-inch LP in which Lewenthal plays and explains the strange piano pieces of this eccentric French composer. Alkan is far too weird to summarize in a few words, but fans of Erik Satie will revel in this music as well.

TWO ORGAN LPs hold interest next: The second volume of "The Magnificent Mr. Handel" features short fanfares, marches, overtures and other pieces from the English composer's operas and oratorios, as performed by E. Power Biggs with the Royal Philharmonic conducted by Charles Groves (Columbia M 31206).
A treat throughout, and sparkling sound as well!

The other organ album is Anthony Newman's latest (M 31127), which spotlights all three of the "Chorales" for organ by Franck, as well as Bach's "Trio Sonata No. 4 in E Minor," and "Fantasy and Fugue on B-A-C-H" by Liszt. Newman's technique is staggering and the sonics on both his harpsichord and organ LPs preserves the brilliant sound.

The "Chorales" have always been favorites of mine and this version is most welcome, showing Newman's taste in the more subtle areas of interpretation.

TELEVISION NOTES

By JACK GAVER

The Disney hour on NBC Sundays is in its 11th year on that network, and plans for its continuance through the 1972-73 and 1973-74 seasons already have been completed. The late Walt Disney first put his products on the home screen in 1954 when ABC was the outlet.

On Sunday CBS will begin another "AAU International Champions" series to be broadcast on 17 Sunday afternoons through Aug. 27 except for a pre-empted date Aug. 20. This is the fourth year for the program which covers a diversified series of Amateur Athletic Union events. Some of the events will consist of Olympic trials for the 1972 games in Munich later this year. Three of the programs will be an hour long, the rest run for 90 minutes.

The ceremonies at which the 24th annual Emmy Awards of the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences will be announced will be telecast from Los Angeles on CBS May 14.

NBC has been awarded exclusive rights to the post-season Senior Bowl football game in Mobile, Ala., through 1975. The network has telecast the contest between top college seniors from the North and South for 15 consecutive years.

The post-season Gator Bowl football game will be televised by the ABC network in 1972, 1973 and 1974.

"Somerset," NCB daytime drama serial, was two years old on March 30. It was spin-off from another NBC serial "Another World," and in its early months was entitled "Another World-Somerset."

Griffin Productions — that would be Merv — has signed singer Leslie Uggams to star in a potential summer replacement series and a batch of specials to be placed in syndication in the fall.

The six singing Osmond Brothers, widely seen on video variety shows for several years, have inspired a new animated series called "The Osmonds" that ABC will air on Saturday mornings beginning in the fall. The story line involves them in a world tour.

May 2 is the date when NBC begins a weekly series of repeated "Bonanza" episodes under the title "Ponderosa." They will be aired at 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays until the fall and will be selected from past years of this 13-year-old series. Through the summer there also will be the usual repeats of this season's "Bonanza" episodes in the regular 9-10 p.m. Sunday period.

Marin Poets' Corner

SAND

In the walk along the shore
One recalls those memories,
All the joys once found here:
  Building castles,
Tantalized by ocean wave,
  Knowing it artifact of sand,
Soon would all be gone.
